The Convention and the Candidates.

In another column will be found the proceedings of the Democratic Conservative Con vention, held here on Saturday last, the 9th inst., and it must be gratifying to every mem ber of the party that, although the delegates were much divided in opinion as to the most suitable candidates to be chosen, the proceedby a spirit of irreconcilable antagonism, or drawn: made turbulent by demonstrations of disorganization, to which the excitement of the preliminary canwass had given apprehension. True, delegates, who were anxious and active for the nomination of others than those who were successful, supported their favorites with earnestness and zeal, but all reemed to realize the necessity of union, and to recognize their allegance to that sterling Democratic principle—acquiescence in the will of the majority.

In this connection, we would repeat what we have, time and again, urged upon disappointed aspirants and their peculiar friends; Asbury Mullinis, Charles W. Millender, Charles W. Charles W only had their claims deferred until another time. Let them and their friends bow in deference to the popular choice, and by a hearty co-operation with their party friends, labor to Herticuitural Fair.

The ladies and gentlemen of Sandy Spring, n this county, formed, some years ago, a lierticultural Society, having for its object the mutual improvement of its members in the roduction of vegetables, fruits, flowers, &c. hibited specimens of their productions., The Fair for 1871 took place on Thursday of last invited to attend. week. It was attended by a large crowd, who were amply repaid by the display of fine apples, pears, peaches, grapes and other fruits, the greatest variety of vegetables, and last, though not least, the most beautiful display of flowers, that were on exhibition. In regard to all of bese various productions, a most marked imrovement on former exhibitions was manifest, thus evidencing the good resulting from the formation of the Society. All seemed to enjoy themselves in the examination of the various articles, and many were the interchauges of riews with regard to their cultivation. Several addresses were delivered pertinent to the occasion. The social feeling engendered by these meetings can only be appreciated by participation. The exhibition gave incontestaparticipation, The exhibition gave inconvena-ble proof of the intelligence, faste and enter-prise of the good people of Sandy Spring.
