This is a government of limited powers—is the year 1800, when parties divided under the names of Federalist and Republican, and were led on by Jefferson and the elder Adam—the broad and distinctive lines of demarcation were then marked out—the one party. Republicans, contending for a stict construction of the Conjuitution, the other for a latitudinous construction of that instrument. The one contending that Congress had no power to legislate outside of the granted powers in which were clearly stated what they had the right to do, the other contending that they had the right to have clearly stated what they had the right to carry three granted powers into effect. This was the distinguishing features between the two parties, who were led on by the brightest intellects of the day and whose lances were poised in each quadrennial context for a period of more than half a century. During that time the country was expanded by the acquisition, thus elalging the sphere of legislation, which brought the great minds of the day into constitution and infringe upon the rights to mand infringe upon the rights to seal and infringe upon the rights of the State; and the results and function and infringe upon the rights of the State; that the virginia Legislature peased the celebrated Resolutions of '99 and '90, which were after-wind and infringe upon the rights of the State; that the was the seal of the power here of the power here after the leaves of the want of information about some bond—the virginia Legislature peased the celebrated Resolutions of '99 and '90, which were after-wind and infringe upon the rights of the State; are antients to know any of these bouds are valid and how many of these bouds are valid and how many and the residuate of the content and the residuation of the s This is a government of limited powers-in Resolutions of '93 and '99, which were after-wards re-affirmed in the equally celebrated Kentucky Resolutions. These expounded the true theory of the government and are only referred to naw to prove the character of the government. The purchase of Louisians by Mr. Jefferson was resisted by the Federalists, while the Alien and Sedition laws passed under the administration of the elder Adams was resisted by the Republicans. The constitutionality of the Lauisiana purchase has never since been questioned and to this day reflects the wisdom and the sugarity of the statesman President, and the repeal of the Sedition laws proved the correctness of the opinions expressed by the opponents of that measure.

And this principle of strict and latitudinous both in and out of Congress up to the break ingolar appellation for dress goods, naturally queries the fair sex? The new name it was that the Hemorran opposed the establishmout of a United States Bank and appropriation for dress goods, naturally queries the fair sex? The new name in dry Rodger is the foreign service than you peditions to improvements by the General Government to works that were not of National importance, the Federalists (afterwards called Whige) always favoring their adoption. But since the war these oid landmarks have been washed away by the best thood of the country and the Radicats have murity to constitutional law and held high carnival over their enactments. It is to bring the government back to its ancient mornings that the Democratic principle of strict construction, had for this purpose they call upon all the friends of counting for the grappe with the living issues of the day, always, however, contending for the grappe with the living issues of the day, always, however, contending for the grappe with the living issues of the day, always, however, contending for the grapt lymn excellepting of spiritual disputational likelyt very where to come to the rescue.

Radicals will not touch him with a forty-foot the Republicans (since called Democrats) in the better days of the Republic, when the government was administered by such men as Madison, Monroe, and Jackson, and the laws expounded by a Welter, a Marshall, and a Taney, compared with which the Republicans of the present day are but as "Hyperion to a Saty," while the Constitution under their construction is a mere rope of sand, and from their enactments made to mean any and everything. By it poor Mrs. Surratt was judicially murdered—by it the unfortunate people of torn from their homes and lodged in jail uner the infamous Ku-Klux act-br it a State present Chief Magistrute would annex San Doningo to the United States, and by it he would centralize the powers of the Federal head, strip the States of their rights, and make them mere decendenties upon the corernment and place them under the control of a despot. To this In their might, and assert their high prerogapitting the servants to become the masters. There is too much toadyism, too much sycophancy to Gen.
