HE TOOK IT.—An honest, thrifty, well-to-do Gerran in a Concentruat city applied to a weathy landlord who rented a great many houses. "The house is to let, certainly," said the owner, "and if upon inquiry I find you to be a responsible and saitable man for a tenant, you shall have it." "Very root, Mr. II —; you makes joost as many questions as you mind, I takes the house when you get ready." Two days later the house-owner called upon the German. "Well," he said, "I have inquired pretty generally respecting your character and means; and, as averybody speaks of you as an honest, respectable man, of ahundan typoperity, you can have the house. "Vell. dea," replied Hans, "I takes the house. And I wants to tell you I've asked all about you among the beeples, and they say that you is the meanest landlord in the town. But I takes the house all the same."

Mr. Greeley's Speech at Portland. At a public reception given Mr. Greeley at Portland, Maine, on Wednesday of last week,

For these greatends I have struggled, and I hope the issues of the third is not doubtful. I thor-oughly comprehend that no personal consider-ation has drawn together this wast assembly. Chairman, it is a part of the unwritten law of our country that a candidate for President may not make speeches in vindication and commendation of the principles whereupon he is supported, nor the measures which his election is intended to promote, though a candidate for Vice President is under no such labidation. I not merely acquiesce in the restriction, I recognize and affirm its propriety. The temporation to misreport and misrepresent a candidate for the higher post is so great, the means of circulating such perversions among people who will never see a word of their refutation are so rast, that a candidate has no moral right to subject his friends to the perlish emans from the canvass. (Cheers] Yet there is a truth to be uttered in behalf of those who have placed me before the American people in my present attitude, which does them such honor that I claim the privilege of stating it here, and now.
