A late London paper says, " it is not so much because the eagle is used as the ensign of Imperial Dignity, as because it is a bird of prey, that it forms an appropriate emblem of the government of Bona arte."

Quere. If such he the case, is it not somewhat extraordinary that Great Britain has not adopted the eagle also? She certainly has a claim which will be acknowledged as just by all nations.

Extract of a letter from Bordeaux, dated

"The exportation of all sorts of grain and figur from this country to Spain and Portuga' being now permitted, must render speculations from your side in those articles hazerdous.

"We shall have an immense harvest and viotage this year. Wines and Brandies in particular are looking down. Colonial produce in general advancing."

The price of flour at Boideaux was only five dollars per barrel at the time the above letter was written.

We copy with great pleasure the following spirited and just sentiments, from the Messenger, a paper published in North Carolina:

" Several British ships of war continue to cruize before the harbour of New York, capturing, ill-treating, and detaining our vessels, impressing their crews, and sending some of them to Hairtax. N.S. Our readers will see in this conduct something more than casual injury arising from the ordinary course of the war, and our access to those seas where it is carried on. Months have elapsed since this conduct was commenced; and all its features discover that the com-· manders of the British ships are governed by rigorous orders from their superiors. It has therefore become an affair of high political consequence. We have no doubt but our executive has taken the most direct measures to assure itself of the motives which have directed the violence of the British government; end that it will act with becoming energy in counterscling it.

" Should the cabinet of Great Britain, presuning upon the weakness of our naval force, the economical conduct of our government and the forbeurance of former times, determine to contract our connections and alliances so as to suit their policy, it will become our duty to stop their progress by every means in our power. We had better suspend for a season our commerce upon the ocean, than submit to the mercy or the controul of every maritime power wacse, interest may be profited by it. If Great Britain is resolved on fercing our com pliance with her wishes in any respect, she will find herself mistaken. We have the advantage of her in the means, of retaliation. She may think herself sale in having stipulsted by ireaty, that in case of a war we shall not confiscate the property of her subjects; but if she commits spoliation, that stipulation cannot bind us to abstain from indemnifying our own citizens from that property, when in our power; since she is equally bound with us, by treaty, not to commit depredations en our property.--We can, arrived at Charleston on the 31st ult.

This last resort ought only to be tried when all others have failed. But if there is on the part of Great Britain, a settled determination to bind us down to her arbitrary principles, and lay us under her insolent restraints, we hesitate not a moment to pronounce, that war with her would be preserable to submission. Should they determine not to relax in their insolence, we hope congress, on their first meeting, will shut our ports against the admission of her mar ufactures, and authorise repri sals to be made upon her property for any deprecations her government, or her people, may commit upon us. We shall feel many defficulties from the decision; but we shall eventually reap infinitely more advantages. Our domestic manufactures will then gain an existence, which such an event's ems necessary to produce : our maritime independence will be secured, and our prosperity be placed in future beyond the reach of foreign nations."
