

Yester Evening at other times. We do not much object to other outrages for they cannot hinder our advance; but we should really like to have Doctor Dwight think of the morality and decency of such things.

We do not charge these boys with writing the address, nor with transgressing against such light & known facts; but we would just like to them that their leaders and their cause are a stirring fact enough without help, and that we need no further evidence that Yale College is much more complete repository of political poison than the last page of the Course of agricultural information.

Knowing as we do, the steady habits of the College, we wonder at nothing, however aristocratic or indecorous, and we merely mention the fact for the information of those who are there training up their sons for usefulness in a republican country. After boys have practised in this way a little time, they are well prepared for their studies in the gospel ministry. [Hereford Mercury.]

AMERICAN ANNALS.

The Rev. Mr. Holmes of Cambridge, England, has it in contemplation to publish a work, to be entitled American Annals. It will commence with the discovery of America, by Christopher Columbus, in 1492 and extend to the present time; and is designed to give a concise history of the most important events, that have taken place within that period, on the continent of North and South America, and in the West India islands, and of such events, in foreign parts, as had a special relation to this country, or ultimately affected its interests. Beginning with the causes, means and circumstances, of the first discovery of America, it will proceed to notice its subsequent settlement by various nations of Europe, the principal charters granted by European princes to individuals, or to companies; the principal emigration; the numbers of the emigrants; the places to which they removed; the towns which they built; colonies which they planted; the churches which they founded; and the principal persons concerned in the several enterprises for the settlement of America, whether navigators, adventurers, statesmen, divines or warriors, with biographical sketches; the most material facts in the progress of the Americans' settlement; the population of the natives, and of the colonies, at different periods; the formation of new colonies or states; the foundation of colleges and other seminaries of learning; the establishment of societies for promoting useful knowledge; the progress of arts and sciences, the progress of commerce, new inventions, or useful improvements; military & naval strength; civil wars or insurrections, the wars with the Indians—memorable battles, the principal events of the late revolutionary war; changes in the civil and ecclesiastical state; diets and assemblies of continents; and provincial occurrences. It is the design of the author to relate events in the order of time, on the plan of chronology, and yet to divide on articles of peculiar importance after the manner of history. The authorities will be given with precision, and the work will probably consist of two octavo volumes.

London, pap.

In the late premature death of Mr. ALEXANDER, at Cape Flaverton, Batavia, it is to lament the fall of one of the most eminent, one pre-eminent in almost every qualification; and his friends who had the opportunity of being intimately acquainted with his estimable worth, in his youth up, can scarcely hope to fill up the loss.
