Dancing & French Schools.

A Public Ball without being Public! MR. LAWRENCE respectfully informs the public in general, that on the 20th instant, previous to the opening of his different schools (which will be on the 26th instant,) wishing to manifest what he can do in the art of dancing, and to defray the expenses, he intends giving a Grand Ball at his elegant and suitable room at Mr. Cochran's academy, which is situated at the corner of Market-space and Water-street. N. B. Mr. Lawrence will open the Ball by an English college hornpipe, and will afterwards perform some of the most fashionable steps. The gentlemen will pay a dollar for each ticket and have the privilege of being accompanied by one or two ladies. Tickets to be had at this office—Ball to open at 7 o'clock. The following is a translation of a piece of French poetry, both from Mr. Lawrence's writing, and the low degradation of an American—It makes him speak to his friends thus: Ye who gambled in the sunshine of fortune, and pursue with eagerness the phantom of fashion, listen to the sorrows of a youth, who, like you, once possessed affluence, and who now, through dire necessity, is compelled to earn his bread by those acquirements which were taught him for his amusement. The morning of his life was unclouded, and fortune was propitious; his numerous friends saw him surrounded with affluence, his society was courted, and he was happy. The short space of three days—An insupportable loss!—saw him deprived of his possessions, his buildings in ashes; a poor neglected stranger, his attendants deserted him, and his friends knew him no longer; whither to fly? Devolute and forlorn, he seeks, he finds an asylum in the bosom of Columbia; her generous sons know what it was to suffer, and rendered him a ready hand to relieve his distress; they appreciated his talents and success has hitherto attended him. Yet what can ease the tortures of reflection! devotion to the muses, while it conduces to his amusement serves to lessen the affliction of what he was. September 14, d
