The Farmer.

To FARMERS.—Attend well to your fences. Repair the old and put up new where they are wanted. Good fences are the magna charta of the farmer's rights.

Let your orchards be well attended to. Ingraft sions of the best fruit into those trees that produce bad. The trouble and expense will be small compared with the utility.

Give them the advantage of a stone wall if you have the durable materials. This will mellow and enrich the soil and add luxuriance to the trees and their fruit.

Mr. Jefferson's Retreat. [The following remarks contain a complete exposure of the indecency, untruth and shameful misrepresentations of the calumniators of Mr. Jefferson.]

FEDERAL CANDOR! Carter's Mountain. Those who pay a little attention to the state and back-eyed slanders against Mr. Jefferson with a desire to obtain correct information on the subject, require no pains to convince them of the foul and unwarrantable conduct of Mr. Hulbert, in the Legislature of Massachusetts.

From the Bee. By captain Nash, from Halifax we have been favored with the following account of the trial and condemnation of the brig Happy Couple, of New York: The Happy Couple, Thomas W. Story, Master.

time was on the question put thereupon agreed to by the house unananimously.

A further authority of Mr. NICHOLAS in support of the calumny, heard that he says: "I am happy in having an opportunity of declaring, when it can be attributed to no improper motive, that I have long since changed the unfavorable opinion which I once formed of that gentleman's political conduct; and that I consider him as one of the ablest of the American patriots."

Yet with these facts and public documents staring him in the face, this enlightened legislator has pretended to believe his aspersions. Strictly speaking, Mr. Jefferson never resigned the office at all, as he served out the full term for which he was elected.

It is not to be expected that President Jefferson will stoop to the task of defending himself against the assertions of the most base and unprincipled scribblers and editors that ever disgraced the arts of writing and printing; when his predecessors waited till their retirement from office to repel the charges made against them.

From the BOSTON PALLADIUM. By captain Nash, from Halifax we have been favored with the following account of the trial and condemnation of the brig Happy Couple, of New York: The Happy Couple, Thomas W. Story, Master.

This case was lately argued and decided in the court of vice admiralty at Halifax, upon two very important points: The one concerned the armament of American vessels—the other respected the right of carrying contraband articles to those parts of St. Domingo, under the dominion of what is now called the empire of Hayti.

The captains of both the schooners have orders to follow your directions as to the route of the passage, and to obey such signals as you may, in the course thereof, give for their government, either in sailing, or in case of your and their having recourse to arms in defence of your persons and the property committed to your charge and the protection of your guns, which we consider so competent to the security of all your little squadron, that nothing but some unforeseen misfortune, or bad management in case of action, or separation (which we think, with care is to be avoided) as to render the risk very small indeed; but in case the latter should happen, we have appointed Turks Island as the place of rendezvous, and that which ever arrives there first shall wait ten days to give an opportunity for the others to join them.

It is not because the most horrible barbarities that can disgrace human nature have been war-torly perpetrated in that devoted island by the infuriated blacks for the purpose of drawing out or exterminating the proprietors. Might does not constitute right—France has all along retained, and still retains her right to the island of St. Domingo, and nothing but the present war prevents her pursuing the means to regain it. The independence of that island acknowledged by France or Great Britain? It is possible England may have taken a part, and although, according to Vattel, third parties may interfere by the law of nations, yet the judge conceived it was to be regretted that an interference had so often taken place.

contract made with DeSalines by some merchants residing at New York; and the object of the armament was absolutely to force this trade through the French privateers cruising off the island of St. Domingo. The brig and the schooner Dahl delivered their respective cargoes at St. Marks, the Ann having foundered at sea, and the brig on her voyage back to New York with a return cargo, and with the ship Alert, of Bolton, also armed, and another vessel under her protection, was captured by the Cambrian frigate, and brought to Halifax for adjudication.

As to the mode of search, the belligerent had a right to send a boat on board for that purpose, and if a British cruiser, under any circumstance of suspicion had ordered the master of this ship to come on board of him, and he had refused, the Judge said he would have held the vessel and cargo, sailing under such instructions, liable to confiscation.

The Judge then remarked, "that as by the examinations and the exhibits in the case, it appeared beyond a doubt that there was an actual necessity for an armament upon such a voyage, and as there had been no resistance made or intended to be made against a British cruiser, he should determine, that the whole of the armament was lawful, although at the same time he would acknowledge that this armament, lawful in itself might have been rendered otherwise by the improper conduct of the master. Upon the second ground, however, he could not but say, that the ship and cargo stood in a more perilous situation than was not, he observed, an ordinary case of contraband. It was the execution of a contract of very great extent, to supply a self-elected government with an unlawful article of the most offensive nature. The single question, whether or not the island of St. Domingo was a French island, would decide the point.

The Judge further remarked, "that no paper had been issued from the British government declaring itself in alliance with"
