It appears by the total accounts, that the fleet which anchored in Port Royal, Jamaica, is not a fleet which was formerly under the command of Admiral Cochrane, and which came under the command of rear admiral Dacres upon the return of the fleet to Europe in the month of April last, on hearing of the British fleet having levied contributions on Dominica, Antigua, &c. but has on her and went in search of them. Admiral Mahan, it seems outmaneuvered her, and sailed to St. Domingo, while Dacres was being blown to windward his rear to Jamaica. It has been in constant hearing of the arrival of General Dacres, who has been captured by British troops, and who has been put in the hands of the British. It is said that he is a brave and worthy officer, and that he will be a great asset to the British. It is also said that he is a brave and worthy officer, and that he will be a great asset to the British.

Should the recent account be correct, that there are 11,000 of the fleet at Jamaica, the inevitable conclusion is that only one of us is as good as dead.

On the other hand, it is true that 11,000 of the fleet at Jamaica, under Dacres, is not a fleet which was formerly under the command of Admiral Cochrane, and which came under the command of rear admiral Dacres upon the return of the fleet to Europe in the month of April last, on hearing of the British fleet having levied contributions on Dominica, Antigua, &c. but has on her and went in search of them.

Mr. Jefferson. It has been reported, and it is to be expected, in the moderate department of Mr. Jefferson, and from concurring ideas, that he will have the magnanimity to decline the continuance of the high office of president of the United States, at the expiration of his present solemn engagement to the nation. Although this act of public virtue should be registered as a brilliant instance of fidelity, even in the career of an honorable and philanthropic ambition, we find, to our misfortune, that even a disposition to recede from the exercise of well-managed authority, cannot silence the clamor of those arrogant and ambitious men, who are sleepers in their endeavor to annihilate our civil and religious liberties! Before this generous disposition was in currency, he was charged with an insatiable desire of power; now, it has become probable, that he will nobly forego that power, in opposition to the common voice of his grateful country; the Anglo-federal faction are but charging the tone of their obsequy, and charge that to his policy
