Public Notice.

To all Bakers within the City of Baltimore, and all Shop-keepers that are concerned in selling bread. That we, a few bakers, have consulted one with another that it would be best to give public notice, that if they will not comply with the ordinance, that every loaf they sell must weigh four ounces, or twenty four ounces or three pound, the ordinance permits no other size: Therefore we came to a resolution, that after this public notice, we will hire such persons as will go about to as many shops and bakers as they can in a day, to try to enforce the ordinance, and buy up such light bread as bakers and shop-keepers sell. Such bakers and shop-keepers as are ignorant of the extent of the fine that the ordinance points out, that every loaf that does not weigh a pound and a half or three pound, is ten cents a loaf fine, and every loaf that has not the baker's name in full on it is ten cents a loaf fine, and the person that buys such light loaves has it in his option to take out a warrant for every loaf, which amounts to six to sixty-five cents a loaf, if the informer will be rigorous. If those baker's and shop-keepers that sell light bread think themselves, that they cannot comply with the ordinance, because the ordinance is grievous to them, let them take the form and privilege of our republican government and draw up a petition to our honorable body, City Council, to have their grievances removed; but their present proceedings are injurious to such as wish to comply with the ordinance, and injurious to private citizens, and taking advantage of the poor and ignorant, and themselves gain nothing by it, but is only calculated to give six or seven loaves for twenty-five cents to avaricious shop-keepers that sell it at six cents a loaf.
