CITY OF BALTIMORE, SS.

By THOROWGOOD SMITH,
Mayor of the City of Baltimore,

A Proclamation.

WHEREAS from the decline of the malignant fever in New-York and Philadelphia, and the advanced season of the year, it is believed that the uninterrupted intercourse with these cities, may again be happily renewed without danger:

I have therefore thought proper, by and with the advice of the Commissioners of Health, to issue this PROCLAMATION, hereby annulling and making void, from and after the date hereof, my several Proclamations of the sixth and ninth days of September last, restraining the intercourse with the Cities of Philadelphia and New-York.

Given under the corporate seal of the City of Baltimore, the (L. S. C.) twenty-third day of October, one thousand eight hundred and five.

THOROWGOOD SMITH,
Mayor of the City of Baltimore.

DIALOGUE BETWEEN FRANKLIN AND WASHINGTON.

Franklin. What makes you, my friend, so melancholy?
Washington. The events now passing in that scene in which we lately bore a part. When I behold the instrument given to virtue for its defence drawn in the cause of vice, and see the blood of the innocent flowing in so copious a stream, my mind is filled with gloomy thoughts and I am almost tempted to question the wisdom of that Providence that presides over the affairs of men.
Franklin. It is a gloomy picture, and I am not surprised at its effects on your feelings. True heroism and beneficence are ever pacific; and whether these sentiments animate the philosopher in his closet, or the general at the head of his army, their power is equally irresistible, and their effects the same. But civil tyranny and religious bigotry are the deadliest scourges of the human race. Kings are always tyrants, and superstition their invariable supports. Amidst, however, the rage of the passions, do you not contemplate with satisfaction yonder spot, in which animation reigns without warfare, and where the happiness of no man is built upon the misery of a brother.
Washington. Yes, my heart derives its life blood from contemplating the scene. That was once our country. It is still my country. My eye dwells on it by day, and I dream of it at night. You know that while living its glory was our idol; and now I call heaven to witness its happiness is the most precious ingredient of my enjoyment. Franklin, it is to you, more than to any other, that America owes the acquisition, and still more the preservation of her glory!
Franklin. Say not so. Your sword cut the gordian knot of slavery. Your sword achieved—
Washington. What you planned.
Franklin. Generous soul! Let us share the merit, not to the exclusion of many others of our countrymen, but with them. It is true that long before the era of her independence I thought, deeply thought, that the acorn must become an oak. I saw the soil was kindly; I perceived that the seed was sown, that it had taken root, and all that I feared was that some unreflecting mortal would disturb the earth too soon, and extinguish its germinating power. Great works require time, and I was afraid that intemperance by denying this necessary help mate would blast the fair prospect of a good harvest. But our countrymen proved wise; they waited till the proper season; they made their choice, and their valour won the day. They alone are free, and they only are happy.

Washington. But will they remain so? I reflect on their present enviable situation until my brain almost grows giddy with delight; but often I start as from a trance and ask myself whether the next moment they may not sink as low as those that surround them.
Franklin. No, that can never be, America can never fall to the degradation of Europe; though Europe may and will rise to her level.
Washington. Yet there are the same baneful passions, the same sordid interests, the same ambitious men there as elsewhere.
Franklin. True, but there is no where else the same people.
Washington. There are men who avow their hostility to republican principles.
Franklin. But the people scorn them.
Washington. There are the advocates of war and carnage,
Franklin. Whom the people look upon as madmen or knaves.
Washington. There is a host of men who calumniate the fairest characters and the greatest men.
Franklin. The adamant of whose fame blunts the arrows of slander, which fall pointless to the ground.
Washington. These wretches dare to enlist my name into their service; as if I were not a genuine republican, and the decided friend of a pacific course, or as if I could ever debase myself by sanctioning the atrocious falsehoods which party malice alone could propagate.

Franklin. This effrontery has often grieved me, for I feel as jealous of your reputation as of my own. But calumny, even against myself, has long since ceased to trouble me. I lived to a good old age. During the whole of my life my greatest ambition was to be useful to my fellow men. And I may boldly say that I never did a public act not dictated by virtuous motives. Still it is equally true that I neither did, or attempted, any thing of importance for which I was not traduced. Calumny is the natural offspring of meanness, envy and disappointment. It is through its polluted channel that blasted ambition pursues its revenge. Tho' not insensible to the comforts of life, God knows that I set little value on affluence. And yet I have been charged with speculation.
Washington. And infamy has covered those who made the charge.
Franklin. And infamy will cover those whose envenomed pens are now busy in traducing the most illustrious characters. Jefferson who was cradled in liberty, will live to see his calumniators covered with universal contempt.
Washington. That man has risen beyond my highest hopes. And what is more, were it possible to assign him a higher station, he richly deserves it.

Happy the country that has such a chief magistrate, and still happier the nation that is worthy of him.

Franklin. The American horizon is not altogether without clouds; and the present sun shine may not be without intermissions. But take my word for it, this man, whom I sometimes, perhaps vainly, take pleasure in considering as my pupil, will long be a friend in every peril. Power has not corrupted, nor can it corrupt him. Its only effect is to animate and expend his native benevolence; to make him more active, and the instrument of more extensive good to his fellow men.
Washington. Yes, his character shines with a pure and steady lustre. He has promised nothing which he has not performed, while he has performed much which he never promised: That such a man should be deluged with obloquy.
Franklin. Is a proof of his eminence. But I can administer to you some consolation on this point. I know him well; and I know that the calumny of his enemies gives him little pain, and that the strongest sentiment it excites is pity for those that revile him.

PROPHECIES.

To the Editor of the New-York Mercantile Advertiser.

SIR,
According to the prediction of St. Cezaire, who in the year 1600 was bishop of Arles, in the province of Languedoc, great events were to take place between the years 1800 and 1809. Part of them have been already accomplished. He says, "There shall be war; a peace of short continuance; some partial events in both hemispheres; an almost general contention among the crowned heads; several scourges, as fire, shipwreck, earthquake, inundation, famine, plague, &c. God in his wrath will punish mankind but will preserve his chosen people to repopulate the world. A new order of things will take place, and continue for a thousand years. Men will then relapse into a state of impiety, and become objects on whom the divine wrath will be poured out."

In the year 1796 a member of the Irish parliament predicted before the whole house many events which were to happen in Europe, spoke of the troubles which afterwards broke out in Ireland, and prophesied its preservation.
Miss Labrouse who was born in the city of Libourne, in France, foretold the revolution, the re-establishment of religion, and the tranquility which took place at the beginning of the present century.
Nostradamus, a French astrologer, who wrote in the year 1590, predicted the destruction of the altar and the throne. He says, in one of his prophecies,

"Between the signs of the Virgin and the Balance shall come a chief to reign in France;" and we now witness its fulfillment. It is well known to every body that the constellation of the Virgin governs from the 22d August to the 22d September, on which day until the 22d of October, it is succeeded by that of the Balance; and during this latter month Bonaparte (now emperor) arrived in France from Egypt. It appears to me that he is designated in the Apocalypse and in the Visions of Daniel by the name of "the great Beast with ten horns, which shall destroy many kingdoms and shall subdue the leopard." It is evident to me that he has been placed on the throne of France to execute the decrees of Heaven, X.

From a late London paper.

The following article is now circulating on the continent, as comprehending the principal complaints alledged by the court of Vienna against the government of France, viz.—The occupation of Hanover, of the Papal states, and the kingdom of Naples, as well as the Helvetic republic, contrary to the treaties of Ratisbon and Luneville; the incorporation of Piedmont with the French empire; the invasion of the German empire by the seizure of the Duke D'Enghien or the territory of the Elector of Baden; the seizure of several Islands on the Rhine, which, according to the treaty of Ratisbon, belonged to the German empire; the demand, or rather threat, to occupy all the sea-ports in Dalmatia, and in the ci-devant Venetian states, during the present war; the demand or menace to occupy the capital of the kingdom of Naples, all its forts and sea-ports; the occupation of all the sea-ports of the kingdom of Etruria; the incorporation of Parma and Placentia with France, contrary to the secret articles of the treaty of Luneville; the imperious demands to the courts of Vienna and Naples to exclude all British and Russian ships from their respective harbors; the late imperious demands to occupy the sea-ports in the Island of Sicily; the creation of a new kingdom in Italy, contrary to the secret articles of the treaty of Luneville; the incorporation of Genoa with the French empire, contrary to the secret articles of the treaty of Luneville; the evasive and insolent answer given to the representations of Count Cobenzel, ambassador from the Emperor of Germany; and the insulting language held by the chief of the French government to all the representations of his majesty the emperor of Germany and Austria.
