PRIVATE CORRESPONDENCE. Panis, Jan. 12.

" If our internal situation was as prosperous as our external exploits are brilliant, we would be the most happy and wealthy people in the universe. The reverse is unfortunately the case. While imperial favorites riot in luxury, and scandalize by extravagance, the community at large are wretched, oppressed by taxes, tormented with distrust, suffering equally from a ruined commerce, from want of confidence, and from a penury, which is as difficult to-be described, as to be believed by foreigners, who have no other opportunity of judging of Bonaparte's empire, but from the columns or paragraphs of the Moniteur. " It is said, that new preposals of peace, will, immediately after Bonaparte's return here be made to England. . If they are refused, the army on our poast will be doubled, and the invasion of England, Scotland and Ireland, will undoubtedly take place before thenext autumn.

" Orders have arrived to form new magazines not only on the coast near Boulogne and Brest, but on the Spanish frontiers; and our politicians pretend, that before we finally settle our differences with Prussia, Russia and Sweden, and other states in the north, Spain and . Portugal will, in the south of Europe, recompence some members of the Bonsparte dynasty with new diadems.

" At Toulon they are very active in equipping five ships of the line and four frigates, which are reported to be destined first for Carthagena, and afterwards for the West Indies; if they can escape your cruizers." Another private letter.

January 25. Hesides the electorates already elevated into kingdoms by our emperor, he intends, according to report, to confer the same honors on the republics of lielvetia and Batavia. ... His brother-in-law, Murat, is intended as the sovereign of the latter, and his brother-in-law. prince Borgbese, is to be king of the former. The electors of Saxony and of Hesse have also been offer. d regal rank, if consenting to certain pecuniary sacrifiecs. "Spain will, within 12 months (remember what I write) share the fate of Italy. With Portugal she is intended the be ruled by the sceptre of a Bonaparte; but whether by that of a Joseph, Lucien, or Jerome, depends upon the auccess of our cabinet in its plan on the Turkish Empire, or in its infrigues with Prussis, Russis. and the other courts of the north.

Some serious jealousies had broken out between our principal generals. Bernadotte's fafor with our emperor increased so much after the battle of Austerlitz, that he was promised a princely rank; but no sooner was this known than Soult, Angeresu and Massens demanded the same titles. After some discussion, Napoleon followed the advice of Berthier and Talley. rand, and determined to promote all his field marshals to princes i if not sooner, they will be proclaimed as such on the 2d of May. 4 -13 1 er 2 - 14 com 3 - 14 com
