

FRENCH GASCONADE.
The Emperor Napoleon has subdued Austria, humbled Russia, allconquered Prussia, and commanded the admiration of the world, by his generosity and moderation, as much as by his valour and achievements. England still dares to resist, but her resistance is the struggle of the agony of death. She is breathing her last. If she desire a few years longer existence, instead of immediate destruction, she must in the East re-establish the Kingdom of Mysore such as it was in 1784; restore Ceylon to Holland, and renounce her monopoly in Indian commodities and trade. In the West, she must give up Jamaica, as a security for her assistance to us to destroy the anarchy of the blacks in St. Domingo. She must evacuate the Mediterranean, give up Malta to its Grand Master, and Gibraltar to its lawful and territorial Sovereign. No where inimical ports will be declared in blockade, or the flags of Neutrals be molested, insulted, and pillaged. The sea shall be as free as the earth; and without the permission of the Emperor of the French, a vessel shall no more dare to sail, than a fort, be built, or a cannon be fired. Frenchmen! you are already, thanks to your heroic Emperor, the most powerful of people—little more patience, you will also be the most happy and the most wealthy.
(Signed) "DUBOIS, Prefect of Police.
(Countersigned) "PLIS, Secretary.
Paris, December 17, 1805.

More of Miranda.—The Leander, Captain Lewis, sailed from New-York in February last, with general Miranda, a large quantity of regimental clothing, arms and accoutrements for 15 or 20,000 men—she cleared out for, and arrived at Jaquemel, about the first of March. On her passage she met with the British ship of war Cleopatra, who pressed 20 of the people on board, (as has been mentioned). All of whom are said to be English or Irish, and were without protection, in lieu of whom the Cleopatra put on board the Leander a number of Americans, whom they had taken out of what they called American prizes—most of these men were obliged to enter themselves on the enlistment on board the Leander, either by fair or foul means, if they would not volunteer they were pressed—two of them made their escape at Jaquemel, by swimming from the Leander, and got on board an American vessel, where they were pursued, but being hid, could not be found by the pursuers, when the Leander's officer said if he should hereafter find the vessel they were hid on board of, that he would press and take on board the Leander, ever since except the captain, and would scuttle the vessel.

On the arrival of the Leander at Jaquemel, there was the appearance of the greatest secrecy, no one was admitted on board, nor on shore, except Captain Lewis, who permitted on shore, and he as soon as he was landed, sat off to visit and report to the black general of Hayti, at the new city of Desalines, which is built in the mountains and strongly fortified, it being the determination of the British, to burn all the towns on the sea board, should the French ever attempt to invade the island again, and defend themselves in the mountains to the last.

While Admiral Lewis was on his visit to the emperor, the negroes at Jaquemel became very uneasy at the great secrecy observed by the Leander, and before his return sent a formal message to know their business, and made preparations to attack the Leander should their ambassador not be well received; but their messenger meeting a polite reception, and an explanation given, their fears and anxiety subsided and all was quiet. After the return of Admiral Lewis from head quarters, Miranda began to prepare, by enlisting men, of which he picked up a number of renegades, who called themselves Americans; but had sold this, as well as their native country, wishing not to see their creditors again; like sergeant Kite, he listed them all for officers. Having mustered about 250 or 300 of these officers, and two or three small additional vessels, he was to sail from Jaquemel on the 26th of March, for Barcelona on the Spanish main, near Cumana, where he expected to effect a landing and be joined by a large body of the inhabitants, for which purpose he has prepared a large number of proclamations, to be distributed as soon as he can get footing or can send ashore on his arrival off the coast. We are told by a person who has seen one of these proclamations, that he invites his countrymen to join his standard, and that he would free them from their tyrannic master, would give to them liberty, &c. &c.—We have some hopes of being able to obtain a copy of the proclamation, which if we should accomplish, we will give a translation of it as soon as possible.
