But he says, in proof of this assertion, that the ship, with the instructions, &c is gone to Nantz, in France, instead of Corrunna, in Spain. What sort of proof is this?-Why did he not tell the ship carried the appointment of envoy extraordinary, and instructions to our minister at the court of France, to go to the court of Spain to assist our ministers at Madrid, in negociating at that court, agreeably to the gentleman's own resolution, and the law passed for that purpose by congress? No-So much candor would not have answered the gentleman's purposes.

But a few days since that gentleman informed the house that the ship had sailed, and taken the money with her before the appropriation was made, &c. Presently it got into the newspapers that a great many tons of specie he believed above sixty, were carried away in that ship. Every member who understood the subject, knew that the assertion was purposes. They knew that that object was alw .ys accomplished by providing a credit for bills to be drawn when the negociation was completed. That this was the case at present, any member may be informed by inquiring at the proper source, but he would take no notice of several other such misrepresentations calculated to impose on the house and to occasion falsehoods to be published in the newspapers.

He said, he would also vote against publishing the president's communications, not only, because the design would totally defeat the negociation, but to destroy confidence between the executive and the legislature, and between our government and foreign nations; but, for this reason, he said, he would wish them published, to correct the disorderly representations made of them by the gentleman from Yirginia on

MECHANICS' BANK.

FOR THE AMERICAN.

The attention which has been excited in the public mind, relative to the formation of a new bank, it is hoped will be a sufficient apol gy for the following observations: It is to be lamented that the first annunciation of so important an institution should be accompanied with any circumstances calculated to damp the ardor of its friends, or gratify the spleen of its enemies .- Being un uninterested spectator-having never changed a word on the subject with any individual connected with it, I cannot be able to discuss the real merits of the subject, nor the views, the pros nor cons of its friends or enemicsbut seeing the sneers of some-hearing the whispers and direful forebodings of others-I cannot think all is right at bottom. If it is to be nothing but a stepping stone to power—a nurse to juggle or scramble for office, as all the others have been, the sooner it is upset the better .-One writer complains the commissioners " are not known" -- another in justification wholly unfounded. They knew that mo- of it in a passion—says "they are," and that such an one shall not go to the Legislature. At one time we have a project, and then a counter-project. A third tells us that something more is maturing behind the curtain, "better still," that will put all things to rights. One is afraid the mechanics will have too much power-another not enough. It is manifestly apparent that all is not right.— From what appears on paper, no other conclusion can be drawn. It is to be a Mechanics' Bank says one-very good. Are the mechanics treated worse at the other banks than others? No-a rich mechanic provided he has a "friend at court," can fare as well as any one elseand a poor one, if he can get proxies, and has votes to give at Elections, can have money. What is wanted, is a bank that shall not become an engine of oppression or monopoly: - A mechanical oppression would be equally as intolerable as any one else—the word artificer or mechanic, though they sound well are no security against the frailties and infirmities of human nature. We want a bank established and conducted on fair principles, that will protect the industrious mechanicthe honest retailer—the prudent dealer, from the nefarious bands of harpies and shavers that infest our city. But if we begin to squabble before we start we shall never agree on the road. Some it ap pears are displeased because there are nomore great men among the commissiont. ers—others say we want none but littlones—so it goes. If we vary in the prec mises, we shall have no conclusion - give us good men—that have public good in view, and that is all that's wanting. The commissioners of the Union Bank were great, in the real bank acceptation of the phrase-: If the length and weight of their purses, constituted greatness, they Mr. F. said, the gentleman has charged | eminently merited the appelation. But the majority of this house with giving they shewed great littleness and very money to purchase peace with Spain, who little greatness in the formation of their refused to negociate with us, and took bank.
