*Highly interesting to the Public in

ON THE YELLOW MALIGNANT FEVER.

Humanity being the first virtue of a physician worthy of a profession so distinguished, and the desire of preserving the existence of his fellow citizens the principal inducement to all his researches; it is with the most heartfelt satisfaction I announce to the public the discovery of a specific remedy for the yellow fever, that terrible scourge, which for several years past (beginning in 1793) has rendered the most flourishing cities of this fortunate portion of the globe the seat of desolation.

The remedy sovereign, as it certainly is, is produced from a mild substance long since used in medicine in certain particular cases, but whose anti-peffili-ential qualities have never been thoroughly investigated until the happy moment, when I turned my thoughts to its analogy with an alkalescent, and turgid bile, which always exists in the commencement of the yellow fever.

Its properties which are opening, difsolvent, alkaline and sudorific, always cause it to neutralize the poisonous quality of the bile and never fail to bring on a salutary crisis, long experience, & success multiplied & attested by certificates, authentic and irrevocable, patients escaped from the danger of the disease by means of the remedy we announce, beyond the possibility of doubt. The simplicity of this remedy, of which the basis is nothing else than Commerce or Castile Soap, may perhaps furnish a pretext to doubt and disapprove, to such as imagine, that only pharmaceutical monsters are capable of triumphing over a disease dangerous in its results, and its contagion. But I appeal to enlightened physicians, who profess, clinical medicine, whether they frequently do not owe their most brilliant success to means often simple in the extreme.

The harmony of nature is simple in its progress; however complicated and beautiful it may be; each plant has its specific virtue, and so also for each distemper there exists the means of curing it.

At the period when the small pox first appeared, all the efforts of the greatest Physicians, and their most complicated prescriptions failed of success against that terrible scourge; it was the hand of time that pointed out the simple and fortunate method of subduing it; and it was time which afterwards, at two distant periods, produced Lady Montagu, and the celebrated Jenner, who have given to that disease the death-blow.

Were not intermittent fevers, and the syphilitic disorder for a long time the approach of the greatest practitioners, and the rock on which they split? Nevertheless, each of those disorders has now its specific.
The Peruvian Bark, that simple Bark, the product of an annual vegetation, infallibly destroys the one, and Mercury that Camelion, a fluid, a metal, properly administered and carefully prepared, annihilates the other.

The remedy of which we speak, in all families is in daily use, and appears to have been, by Providence, scattered with profusion not only as a cure for the yellow fever, but also as the means of preservation from it.

The author of this interesting discovery, thoroughly persuaded of its efficacy in a state of sickness, by the favorable results that he has uniformly obtained from it, believes also that this means employed in the predisposition to sickness can preserve as well from the evil as from the danger of it.

He even believes this remedy, well applied, might have a happy effect against the plague.

The better to make known to the public both the predisposition and the disorder, he will in the first place lay down the indications of the former, and the symptoms of the latter, and will then add some details on the curing effects of this remedy. This he believes the more necessary, since, for want of information, and because a professional character is not called in time, and the use of the preserving remedy is delayed, the majority of patients labouring under the disorder fall victims to it without a possibility of being secured.

First, the predisposition to the yellow fever —the patient generally complains of a slight indisposition, such as is usual before the attack of common fevers, a general uneasiness, lowness of spirits, debility, drowsiness, weariness, followed by pains in the veins, in the thighs, knees, and slight shiverings, which proceed from the lower inferior extremities, to the reins with quickness of lightning, a difficult and long respiration, the saliva, and mucus of the nose, thin, rare and hot, singing in the ears, a heaviness in the eyes, an involuntary melancholy, a want of appetite, and a foul mouth. All these signs or many of them exist for a greater or less time before the development of the fever according to the constitution, the state of the atmosphere, or of the contagion; for I have witnessed patients die in times of great infection before experiencing the febrile crisis; for instance, a patient who consulted me about an indisposition characterized by some predisposing signs, died at the door at the moment I was feeling his pulse, which was by no means febril.

Secondly, the real symptoms of the state of sickness, according to the observations of the author and acknowledged by the best practitioners, are in most instances, but not invariably a chilly fit; in a short time violent pains come on in the fore part of the head, in the eyes, loins, hips and thighs. The face becomes flushed, the eyes of a fiery red, and intolerant of light, with a stinging or burning heat in the skin; the pulse is full, quick and hard; the respiration deep and difficult; the tongue is covered with a whitish fur, and moist; the thirst is sometimes excessive, at others moderate; the stomach is distended, and irritable with pain and burning heat, accompanied by excessive sickness; it is often troubled by violent retching, with a vomiting of mucus, or their drink mixed with an acrid greenish matter corroding the fauces; the bowels are costive; the patient feels great restlessness and despondency, moaning, and tossing about the bed as if to find some relief from a change of posture; hemorrhage at the nose, a difficulty and sometimes a stoppage of urine, &c. &c.

The specific remedy opportunely administered operates in the following manner:—in the first place; the pains decrease; the muscular agitation becomes calm; the urine regains its course; the fever abates; the skin becomes moist; the respiration free; the thirst diminished; the irritation of the stomach disappears, and the vomiting ceases; the dryness of the throat is no longer felt, and from the sixth to the seventh day, either a favorable crisis by means of a sweat or stool, and a bilious vomit destroys the fever; the 8th day the sickness is terminated, and 3 or 4 days convalescence restores to the patient his accustomed calm. If the disease should happen not to follow these periods marked by experience, in such case it ought no longer to be classed with the real yellow fever, but would belong to the class of patrial and malignant bilious fevers, of which the symptoms would be nearly destroyed, but which would render necessary the use of febrifuges, in order to complete the effect of this remedy.

This remedy is also eminently adapted to bilious colics; obstructing affections on the liver; the jaundice; obstructed perspiration, and in a word, to all cases where the acrid bile or inverted secretions menace life, a danger unfortunately too frequent, in consequence of the inconstancy of the climate we live in.

On the advantages of so important a discovery I will forbear to dilate. It is so much the more precious, as, according to the opinion of our most learned physicians, we must now consider the yellow fever as an endemic.

The author the better to convince his fellow-citizens, will add to a memoir which he proposes to have printed, on the method of treatment, by which he has obtained such signal success, the various cures; he has operated by this means in divers epidemics, and during the space of 5 years since he has commenced using it. He thought this lapse of time necessary to consolidate his observations on the poisonous ferment of the disorder, and the victorious effect of his remedy.

All those persons whom a well grounded confidence shall induce to adopt the use of it, will doubtless become strenuous advocates of its infallibility, and as well the unfortunate as the rich, will find at their hands the same succour, and the same assistance.

Hereinafter are mentioned more than a hundred certificates, which establish the period of the discovery.

WE the subscribers, residents of the city of Baltimore, do hereby certify, that Doctor John J. Girard, attended us during the prevalence of the yellow fever, which raged in this city in the year 1800, when laboring under that disorder, and cured us of it by his judicious and salutary treatment, and to testify our persuasion of the truth, and efficacy of his mode of treatment, we have hereto given our signatures.
