We the subscribers, of the city of Baltimore, do hereby certify, that Mr. William Merryman has acted towards us, as his creditors, in an honorable and upright manner—and has settled with us, we believe, to the utmost of his ability, and much to our satisfaction. We are convinced his failure in business proceeded not from his own misconduct, but from those misfortunes incident to trade. And further, after the insolvent act was passed in his favor, he showed no disposition to use it to our injury, but made us, his creditors such liberal propositions as to convince us of his correct intentions towards us. Fifty dollars will be paid to any person who will give such information as will lead to a discovery and conviction of the person or persons, who conceal or inveigled her away; and thirty dollars for the recovery of the Girl. From a Virginia Paper. GEORGE WYTHE, the patriot, the philosopher, the philanthropist, is dead! Few have more strongly evinced the height of moral and intellectual excellence which man is capable of ascending. In the knowledge of law, he was indeed profound! Under a pressure of business at the bar before the revolution, which would have monopolized the attention of others, and unassisted by personal tuition from others, (for except as a lawyer he was self-taught,) he acquired a knowledge of the ancient languages, critically correct. Not only was the father of poetry his intimate companion, but the philosophers, historians and even dramatic poets of antiquity were as familiar to him in their original dress as were almost all the meritorious works of the age in his vernacular tongue. The writer of this sketch has heard him denominated emphatically "the walking library."

At a period of life, which in others would be deemed at least the verge of age, he applied to mathematics and natural philosophy, both which sublime subjects he pursued with an ardor and a depth seldom attained by the youthful student. When our rights were attacked by Great Britain, at the beginning of what, if unsuccessful, would have been termed a rebellion, but which we now boast of as a glorious revolution, even at that time, venerable for age, as he was respected for talents and correctness of demeanor, he assumed the then military garb and accoutrements of the volunteers, whom the divine spirit of patriotic enthusiasm had impelled to convene in the sacred cause of freedom.

The entreaties of the fond partner of his home could not retain him—He appeared before the soldiery, drawn up in military parade, on the alarm of the arrival of an inimical vessel. An awful silence pervaded the ranks. The spectators looked with admiration on him. At length the commanding officer, with surprise, enquired into the cause of his appearing on the field thus accoutred? "I come, replied he, to offer my services to my country, and do what you shall command." With difficulty he was prevailed on to desist from his design; under a persuasion that he could render more essential service in the civil department.

The voice of his country called him to a seat in that congress, which declared the independence of America. He was not long an inactive member of that body. Much of the weight of the most arduous business was supported by him. He was a member of the grand convention which formed the constitution of the United States, as well as of the state convention of Virginia, which ratified that instrument. The scrupulous devotion to justice, the strength of reasoning, and depth of research, which he manifested as chancellor, are known to all. Great as he was in literature, in science and in law, fully impressed that "superiority without morals is vain" his superiority was more apparent in his conduct.

If to do no injury, but to do all possible good, is the summum bonum of morals, he reached it. Deeply informed in the various religions which have existed in the world, his mind was liberal in the extreme to those who might differ from him. He brought into actual practice the purest and most useful tenets of morality and religion. If nature gave to him irritability, reason rendered him in general one of the calmest, the mildest of men. The infantine heart is not less sullied than that which beat in his bosom. Conscious of the equality of others' rights, there was generally a humility about him seldom found amongst those who were inferior to him in understanding and in morals. Every moment not beneficially employed in his estimation, was criminally lost. He rejected with disdain every thing like excess, in which he comprehended all those things not absolutely useful. His extraordinary temperance preserved or added to a strength of constitution which brought him to his eightieth year, with few attacks of sickness. To his country he gave his life exclusively for many years.

He had been blessed with the purest and warmest affection in the conjugal union; when this was dissolving, separating the cords tore his mind; when they were broken, he bowed to the hand which had cut them; but did not fall. He who had not received from others was liberal in communicating instruction. For some years the private tuition of youth was his favorite employment. The illustrious President of the United States, with gratitude and affection boasts himself a pupil of this modern Socrates. Hundreds in America are gratified in acknowledging themselves his disciples. From the President, many of the various officers in the general government, aboard and at home, and in the state government, owe to him their qualification for discharging their duties. To him may be traced their conviction of the truth of the pure doctrine of genuine republicanism. In politics as in morals he with undeviating step pursued one course; and that the most correct. Was it wonderful then that not long before his death he should exclaim "let me die righteous!" Thus lived, and thus died this illustrious man.

HADLEY, June 3. On Sunday the first of this month, a visit with the most disastrous storm of 1866, thunder and lightning, ever known in this vicinity. Soon after the inhabitants had returned from public worship in the afternoon, a cloud arose in the west and north west, with uncommon rapidity, which (though of a peculiar menacing aspect) portended to the people of Hadley, (who have heretofore been providentially exempted from similar judgments) no more (as they supposed) than an ordinary plentiful thunder shower. The rain soon began with unusual violence, and in a few moments was succeeded by a frightful deluge of hail; which driven by a high wind, marked its progress with singular desolation. The hail (which, reanimating from the late drought by the mild rain of Saturday—promised an abundant harvest) was mostly cut up, beat down and destroyed—and present at this time a melancholy contrast to the cheering prospect of the Sabbath-day morning. The hail stones were mostly larger than musket balls; many were of the magnitude of a moderate sized hen's egg. These impelled by the wind, in nearly a horizontal direction, drove and beat in almost every window within the limits of the town, facing the W. and N. Upwards of 7,500 panes of glass were broken and driven in many instances to the further sides of the houses; and in some cases, with such incredible velocity, as to produce indentations upon the opposite walls. In one house above 288 panes were beaten in, and others much fractured.

A Some conception may be formed of the astonishing velocity of the hail, by this fact—In one instance two large stones passed through the same pane of glass, in different places, leaving perforations of diameters, just equal to those of the respective stones, without injuring the intervening parts of the pane. Fortunately, though the wind was very high, and tempestuous, only one building, a barn belonging to captain Moses K.logg, was blown down. We are happy to learn that the neighboring towns escaped the desolating effects of the storm. As far as we have been able to learn, the hail began east of Williamsburg, passed over the centre of Hadley, in a South easterly direction, being in a width from north to south, a little more than a mile. Terminated principally before it reached the south end of A.therst. The rain was probably much more extensive.

NEW ORLEANS, May 2. On Wednesday last the 30th of April, being the anniversary of the day on which the treaty of Paris was signed, confining Louisiana to the United States, the usual respect was paid to the occasion by the inhabitants of this city. At noon a salute was fired from Fort Charles—and the battalion of Orleans volunteers having been previously assembled, under the command of Captain Ross, (Major Dubourg not being in town) passed in review before his excellency the governor opposite the government house; and then marched to the place d'armes, where they paraded, and fired several rounds by platoons, divisions and volleys, with an exactness of discipline that does the highest credit both to the officers and privates. After the parade, which was numerously attended, the principal officers of the government, the members of the legislature, the officers of the garrison and of the militia, and other respectable citizens waited upon the governor at his house; where they were received and entertained with his accustomed politeness and hospitality.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 8, 1866

To the Editor of the American.

SIR, I observed in your paper of Saturday a nomination of four gentlemen to represent Baltimore county in the General Assembly of this state, who are submitted by "A VOTER" for the consideration of the electors, under an impression that they will meet with the approbation of their fellow citizens. I am not disposed, Mr. Editor, to allege any thing that may tend to disunite the republicans or wound the feelings of any individual, who may think himself possessed of sufficient talent and firmness to represent the republicans of this county; but am firmly of opinion the ticket proposed by "A Voter" will not meet with general support. I would therefore submit to the consideration of my fellow-citizens, the gentlemen whose names are hereunto annexed as proper characters to represent us. Their principles are truly republican—their standing in life is respectable and I believe them to be justly entitled to the confidence and support of all who have the interest of the county at heart. A REPUBLICAN. Of Baltimore county. Candidates.

TOBIAS E. STANSBURY, VACHEL WORTHINGTON, PETER LITTLE, GEORGE HARRYMAN.

HIGHLY INTERESTING. We lately laid before our readers some extracts from a Pamphlet written in England, avowedly in defence of Neutral Rights, particularly as they regard the relations between England and the United States. Many enquiries had conjectures have been made as to the author of this work. Some have even imagined that it is the production of a pen under the influence of Mr. Monroe, our Minister at London; and of course are unwilling to admit that its doctrines and opinions can in any manner be considered as a criterion of the disposition and views of the New British Cabinet towards this country. We are extremely happy in being able to assure our readers and the American public generally, that the author of this interesting work is no less a person than Lord HOLLAND, nephew of Mr. Fox; and that it has been issued in England with the view of preparing the public mind for the reception of certain liberal stipulations between the government and America, in which some important and advantageous principles will be conceded to us.
