To the Public.

THE subscriber having as a physician made it his constant study to contribute as much as in his power, to the welfare of mankind—now takes the liberty of exciting the attention of the public, on a preservation, which in Spain, and other Transatlantic countries has proved of much efficacious services towards the averting of contagious diseases in general, and the Yellow fever in particular. The acid steams arising from sulphets or common salt, impregnated with strong oil of vitriol, intermixed with the air, and thus penetrating where ever the introduction of this element is unobstructed, destroy thereby the infection, where it may have taken up its residence. The appropriate chests and other requisite apparatus, will be provided for, and a concise direction be given by the subscriber, if in the space of a fortnight, a sufficient number of gentlemen would incline to patronize the execution of his scheme, and to cover the necessary expenses, by a subscription of Five Dollars each.

In a short time, the subscriber will be able to show the progress of this experiment to any person desirous of being acquainted with the same at his residence. The subscriber further begs leave to inform the public that he will receive at his house, and board such patients as stand in need of an unintermitting medical attendance to effect and complete their cure. Mr. Henry Grattan,

ON THE MOTION OF MR. FOX, IN THE IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT, FOR THE Irish Catholics.

Correctly printed from the Dublin copy, comprising 28 octavo pages. Price 1s 1/2 Cents. From the DUBLIN EVENING POST. Many of the members belonging to this country who spoke in the debate, distinguished themselves in a manner highly honorable to their characters as patriots and Legislators. The speeches of Colonel Hutcheson and Dillon excited uncommon interest in the House, and the Empire at large must ever peruse with awe and admiration the eloquent appeal of Henry Grattan, delivered with an ardour not abated by years, nor disconcerted by a Legislature new to him, but of whose body he should continue to form a distinguished and leading ornament. The silence, the attention, and anxiety evinced when he rose to deliver his sentiments, are described by the London Editors as unrivalled—"His eloquence" says a ministerial Print, "is of a distinct species from the eloquence of any other man—he stands alone—and he is able to stand alone."—This honest acknowledgment (from an adversary) of Mr. Grattan's stupendous talents demand no comment—it is incontrovertible.
