A nation of nine millions of people, which before it can have a man for its own defence, is obliged to send fifty regiments to the East and West Indies, to oppose the entire Indian population, the negroes, the Canadians, and the yellow fever, can never be a military power in Europe; and it is in these circumstances tha rian soldiers, a loss which she will never repair. The English are laughing at the Princes of Europe, when they suppose that governments are weak enough not to make these calculations; and not to see that a nation, which has occasion for fifty regiments to defend its colonies, and an hundred and 50,000 sailors to protect its commerce and maintain its squadrons, is incapable of any effort in Continental affairs. Besides, these fine speeches of England, when she wishes to seduce Cabinets and form coalitions, have never been justified by facts. Let us recal to our recollection what Ministers did at the time of the first coalition. Instead of employing these means, which appear so powerful and formidable in the mouth of their speakers, or their emissaries, the English attacked St. Domingo, Porto Rico, Guadaloupe, Martinique, and seemed to have no other anxiety than to plunder the commerc of their friends, as well as their enemies. 1 the second coalition they went to Egypt, in place of fighting with their allies on the plains of St. Domingo. In the third, they went to the Cape of Good Hope, instead of throwing ten thousand men more into the Kingdom of Naples; and when England acted thus, no one can say that she acted ill, for she could not act otherwise. As she is obliged to pay considerable sums to her allies she has no other means of doing it than by plundering the trade

SATURDAY, AUGUST 9, 1806.

We present our readers this day with further statement respecting the persecuted Osborn: it is a case of such villainous stamp, that it cannot fail rouse the keenest reprobation of every sincere christian and genuine republican; and, we fondly hope, the influence of that portion of meritorious sympathy which must necessarily be excited, will prove sufficiently powerful to induce numbers in Baltimore, to follow the good example set them in Newark & Norfolk, as stated yesterday: --- and to aid such patriotic and benevolent purpose the editor will open a subscription for the Witness. It is printed weekly at two dollars per annum. Its editor is an able supporter of democratic principles; his style of writing is spirited, animated, close, and correct; and his arguments are ever fair, ingenious, candid and logical. Beside, its literary beauties, of a general stamp, will render it's source of refined. amusement.
