

ULM, NOVEMBER 9.
The hard late, suffered by the city of Ulm and its neighbourhood, particularly the prefectures Elchingen, Albeck and Soeflingen, in a war so suddenly pressing upon us, calls so loud upon the sympathy of the well disposed of mankind for participation and assisting aid, that even the first account, of it inserted into public papers, particularly the universal news-paper, made general and deep impressions, and occasioned inquiries into the nearer circumstances. At present, indeed, the particular accounts of the sufferings of whole communities, and of individuals, have not yet been handed in so as to enable us to name with any degree of exactness, sums, to which the loss might amount. But a general view of the scenes visible on the above described spot in the course of only six weeks will strike irresistible conviction in every observer's mind, that the loss is immense and that the total ruin of many families must be the consequence, should at this time philanthropy remain inactive in uniting to their relief such christian brethren, as by an indulging providence have been preserved from similar calamities. We are happy to state that facts already in our power to relate are evidences of the existence of such christian like and charitable disposition.

At the close of September, our neighbourhood was inundated with soldiers—and at the beginning of October, an army of near six thousand men, crowded itself into the city of Ulm, and a small space surrounding it. The greatest part of this army being destitute of magazines, drew its provisions from the city and the neighboring villages. This army was soon surrounded by another still greater, of the opposite side, likewise without magazines, which drew its subsistence from a district, in comparison with the army, to be maintained, undescribably contracted. This happened at a time when the public stores were exhausted, when the prices of all provisions were extremely high, when the harvest was not quite over, and what was gathered in not threshed, when the horses were taken and put in requisition, and those who would carry any thing to market, were in danger of losing both the horses and the produce. Ulm alone, had to maintain for five weeks 15,877 officers, 246,415 soldiers and 41,780 horses, and harbor often at once, more than twenty thousand men. The pressure arising from such crowds, in a place consisting of not more than thirteen thousand inhabitants, and containing one thousand six hundred, mostly small and in part middling houses, beggars description. It was a collection of little barracks and horse stables. Lying in women, and the sick, had to leave their warm rooms to the soldiers.

From this it will be obvious to every reflecting mind, that from the expenses requisite for the maintenance of such an immense mass of people, quite beyond all possible reach; from the waste of fire wood, occasioned by the watch fires by day and by night in and out of the city, which took away not only all the stock of wood laid up, but likewise all the fences in the suburbs, and whatever was combustible in summer houses, and even in many places, doors, window shutters, and wooden utensils, from the ruin of the dwelling houses in the city, increased by three bombardments, and of the gardens and orchards about the place; finally from the distress caused by the requisitions of wollen cloth, leather and other necessities, the loss sustained by the inhabitants of Ulm, must have been immense. These terrors were accompanied by an inundation of insuspicious bank notes, sunk beneath the half of their nominal value, and six penny piece made of copper, refused even by the Austrians, who issued them. Perplexity, want, hunger suffered by many, horrors in beholding the wounded, disgust effected by the appearance of the streets rendered almost impassible by filth, personal affronts and ill usages, to which those were exposed from whom mere impossibilities were demanded—all this is not included in the above considerations.

Mourning as this picture is impressed on the mind of the beholder of the city, yet misery and distress appears in the districts above named, in a shape, if possible, more heinous and terrible. The inhabitants of the villages, more exposed to the vexations of wanton insolence and to the plunder of a soldier, excited by the wants of regular maintenance and by the inclemency of the season, saw themselves deprived of their clothing, beds, utensils, cattle, grain, wool, and money. Many inhabitants, particularly in Pful Offenhausen, Elchingen, Gotingen, Albeck, Jungingen and Soeflingen, are ruined, and the peasants are in want of provisions, and even of grain for sowing, of horses and of agricultural utensils. If these unfortunate sufferers are not doomed to an unceasing scourge of misery, they must now rely on the sympathetic feelings and active aid of generous philanthropists, whose hearts are the more touched by the spectacle of suffering humanity, the more they themselves have been spared by Divine indulgence.

May religion and principles of uninterested generosity produce in such as are able to afford relief, sensations of sympathy and resolutions of active aid. The father of mercy will not suffer any gift to remain in fruitless consequences to the giver, and the consciousness of having fulfilled the duty of philanthropy, together with the gratitude of the relief-ed, by the satisfaction of the better sort among them, will be a never failing source of sweet reward.

To prevent imprudent or fraudulent collections of individuals, the mercantile branch of the city of Ulm have agreed to subjoin this appeal to humanity to their mercantile correspondents, with a request to each of their correspondents to send their contributions or the sums collected from others for the purpose, to them.—These donations (if not, by special directions, designed for a particular application,) will, under the authority of the merchants of Ulm, be collected into one treasury, and in due time most conscientiously distributed.

THE BOARD OF MERCHANTS OF ULM.

Translated by John C. Kunze, German Lutheran Minister of New-York, who will receive any donation sent to him at No. 100, Chatham-street, for the above mentioned purpose and transmit the whole to the mercantile house of Henry van der Smitsen and co. in Alona. A list of all the donations and the names of the benefactors, shall be opened for inspection in his house, and a copy of it deposited in the house of the president of the humane society, the reverend Dr. John Rodgers, or if he should receive hints from benefactors, preferring another mode, he will insert it in some of our public papers. The mercantile house mentioned belongs to them, who are authorised by their correspondents at Ulm.

Whatever division political sentiments may effect in the citizens of the United States, sentiments of humanity unite them. Such is the character of the people of America; and our editors of newspapers, though at open, yet unbloody, war among themselves, I have always found receive accounts of this kind from one another as enemies would a flag of truce. Upon this experience I ground my request to the different publishers of newspapers in the city and in the state, entreating them to give, in their respective papers, a place to this representation.

COMMUNICATION.

We are authorised to say, that John Johnson and Lloyd Dorsey are candidates for electors, of Anne Arundel county, to choose the senate.

A severe gale from N. E. accompanied with heavy and incessant rain, commenced early on Saturday morning, and ended yesterday at noon; when the wind shifted to N. N. W. and blew a gale till dark. We have not heard of any damage being done to the shipping in this harbor, but at the quarantine ground some damage was done to vessels there, but nothing material. The ship Emperor parted one of her cables, and rode out the gale at single anchor. The brig Horatio, from the city of St. Domingo, was lying at the public dock, when she parted her fasts and drifted ashore; but was hauled off as the tide rose, without receiving any damage, except having her rudder knocked off. The schooner Mariner had her chain-plates carried away, &c. The schooner Citizen from Savannah lost one of her anchors. The schooner Betsy, from Guadaloupe, made a harbor under Long Island. The schr. Nimrod, bound out, came to anchor in Gravesend Bay, and stood out to sea yesterday.

(N. Y. paper.)

No doubt can now be entertained of the ignominious doom of our unfortunate countrymen, who fell into the merciless hands of the Spaniards. To the list of sufferers, as published in our last, we have to add the name of Mr. STEEDMAN, of New-York. He had resided seven or eight years at Port-au-Prince, where he joined the expedition. His head was fixed on a pole on the top of a mountain between Lagaira and Carracas. A gentleman, passenger in the Entymion, in coming from Carracas to Lagaira, examined the heads, and recognized the features of Ledlie and Donahue. Capt. Gardner, who expressed great anxiety to be shot, was first hung up—the others in succession, each having his uniform burnt previous to being swung off. After the execution, the bodies were burnt, and their heads ordered to be carried to Carracas, there to be exposed on poles. On the 8th August, the effigy of Miranda was to be publicly burnt at Lagaira. Capt. Suter informs, that the Spaniards, without exception, rejoiced at these proceedings. Phil. Gaz.

The following letter is stated to be from one of the best informed men in Halifax. It contradicts the statement published some time ago, and the account is latter.

Halifax, July 30, 1806.

"The Izette, of Portsmouth, had been tried, and both vessel and cargo ordered to be restored, the claimants paying full costs. By this decree the court has established the right of neutrals to export to Europe the produce of enemy's colonies in the West Indies, provided it was not imported by the same persons, nor with an intention to be exported. A large property is now depending here in a similar situation with the Izette, which it is supposed will be liberated in consequence of this decision.

AMERICAN INTERCOURSE.

The American Intercourse bill has been warmly opposed in every stage of its passage in both houses of Parliament. In the Commons, Mr. Rose pronounced it to be a violation of the Navigation Laws, and highly injurious to our merchants, ship owners, and all concerned in commerce. He said the bill did not provide for a reciprocity of duties on the ships of Great-Britain and America in the ports of British Colonies, which, he said, must have the effect of encouraging the American owners, and preventing any British subjects from attempting to enter into a competition with them, because British vessels from all parts of the world pay what is called the counter-vailing duty in the ports of the United States; whereas the Americans pay that duty only in Great Britain and Ireland. But he said, if it is admitted that supplied in foreign ships are necessary to our islands, why not let in the Danes and Swedes, why confine them to Americans? The bill, he continued, in other respects went beyond what had been asked for; under it, the Americans will be at liberty to send every sort of plantation stores, whether of iron or other articles, and to carry from the islands all their produce. He contended too, that it would essentially benefit the American fisheries, while it injured our own; and he exhorted the House to oppose a measure which would tend to destroy the efficacy of those navigation laws, which, since the reign of Richard II. had scarcely ever been departed from in favor of any nation.—The bill was also opposed by Mr. Percival, who declared that this was no time to relax those navigation laws, upon which so much of the maritime glory, strength and prosperity of this country were founded in favor of America, especially when so strong a disposition to quarrel with England had of late been pretty manifest. Mr. Canning was likewise opposed to the measure. It was, he said, effect to tell the world we cannot supply our colonies;—that at present, iron, leather, soap, candles, hats and many other articles, found their way to the islands in American vessels in violation of the law; but if the bill passed they would proceed thither in abundance, under sanction of law; and thus a boon be given to America at the expense of our manufacturers: He asked whether America after the exhibitions she had made of such a miserable temper, would not be disgusted, if, at a future time, this privilege was withheld; which it must be?—And whether other states, even France herself, would not expect similar benefits, and demand to be put on a footing with this favored nation? The Ministry defended the bill on the principle of expediency, and a permanent supply for the necessities of the colonies. The bill passed yesterday to a second reading, 112 to 54.

Married last evening by the reverend Dr. Bend, Mr. JOHN QUINN, of Annapolis to Miss MARIA LEAKIN, of this city.

Died, on the 9th inst. near the Warm Springs, (Va.) Meriwether Jones, Esq. formerly editor of the Richmond Examiner, since commissioner of the loans for the state of Virginia.
