our relations with Spain did not warrant any fuch mentures, much let's could they be julidied f le the existing circumstances between us and Great Britain. If we went far enough with Spain, we went too far with Great Britain; ii Commercial Daily Advertiser. we did not go too far with Great Britain, we j did not go far enough with Spain.

Designs has no where politively afferted, that the Louisiana treaty was antedered. The information which he had upon that fubject induced him to believe that feels was the fact. The voice given were, That belief is not at all impaired by the objer- i votions in the Enquirer. The only evidence of | the existence of the " contract" is the signature i of the parties to it. If the treaty was "signed" fublequently to the date expressed on the face of] it, it was " unterlitted."

The question of " breach of neutrality" was flated merely by otherically. It connected affedied by the constitunce of the British minister, I at a transaction v. lich he might deem beneficial] to his country. Nothing is more common than figh concessions from the government of a truding people, to the commercial interens of its Jubjects. Mr. Fitt might not only with to enrich the banking heates of London, but gladly Jend his aid to any measure that would take Leuisiana out of the hards of France; and yet his acquieftence remain unknown at the time of i firming the treaty. The " principle ' is at leaft ! diffiurable. Supporte the United States at war deemed a departure from her neutrality? But to have fraged the argument tairly, the fact | ought to have been taken in connection with our pastive conduct under Spanish aggression on the one hand, and our menancing tone towards G. Britain, on the other. From this combination of circumflances, might the not infor a difpetition on our file to depart from our neutrality ? But was not one chief objection to the procedere, that fach tamenels on our part would inspire Great britain with contempt for any reshance which we might make to her pretentions: When it shall be established that aggression upon our maritime rights is a groffer violation of the national honor, than the actual invasion of our tenivery; then, and not till then, may the remark quoted in the Enquirer, ba deemed applicable to this fubject. The traders in our fea perts may estimate the capture of their vellets as of more confequence, than the invalion, or conquett, of one of the western Mares; but they will fearcely perfuade the nation to be of their opinion.

verse; confirming them in the propriety of the shound produce these important effects, and at the same time have little bearing on Spenish relations, is sent to the author of " In portant facts" to explain. Would the opinion, or information of Doctor Franklin on the subject of our come rus with Great Britain, be less er med to neight because he was minister at the court of Verseilles ; there especially if he had sut a tely left the court of at. James's, in ! that expandity! Would such an opinion or such inferm to take less official or less " La commente." than it is come from a minist i at London!

6 Does the author of " important fice" certainly know that Mr. R. did not anneally consult the President on the truth of the " vague Indications of his contions friend," as this writer is pleased to term the secretary of the treasury : A few words will put this subject in is proper Egitt. " Mr. Randolph stated to the nouse that he had been informed, (by two of their members) " that certain propositions had been made, to the treasury, to sound the disposition of the secretary of that department on the subject of advancing the money, voted for extraorentary purposes of foreign intercourse, before the bili had passed through all the forms of a law." But at the same time he declared, that it the recretary of the treasury would disaton the fact, he should have no hesilation in disbettung it. Now, if Mr. Randolph, had derived his information from thit of the fact. And yet because some person undertook to say that such a disavowai had been made to him, a miserable attempt was made in the jublic prints, under color of a specch which was never delivered, to impeach the reactly of Mr. Randolph. The letter of the secretary of the treasury must speak for it ell-Every man will draw hisown conclusions from it. But every man must see, that wheel ther such an mourence did, or did not, take pa-ce, the variety of Mr. Randolph is in no wise implicated.

Having nearly tired my own patience, and I fear more than exhausted that of the reader, I shall reserve for a subsequent communication the disclosure of such other facts and opinions as I deem material to a proper understanding of the events of the last session of congress. In that number I shall go to the koor of all the one which now casts a transitory republican schisms-pledging myself to beam upon their gloomy prospects demonstrate to every impartial and thinking man that the minority are not in the slightest degree tinedured with rederalism; that so far from having any clas towards that party, upon every question in which principle was involved, they had to encounter the joint opposition of the federalists, and that portion of the republican majority who have been denominated time party men.

COMMUNICATION. Decrus - It would be iche to a tempt ar lutation of all the absurdities, to ut.i h this cell brated production has given beater. As if the text itself were not sufficiently guilly uniscopresented by is federal comin litators. Facts have been ascabled to it which is it never contained; and conclusions pretendedly drawn from its doctrines which its author would have blushed to avow:

Fortunate federalists! the very m ment when all their old topics of conplaint are exhausted and thread bare, some new one starts up to animate their cop, and drank it. Her hulband, with some spirite. It would be idle, we repeat, to expose the innumerable absurdities into which Decius has misled them; and at which D cius himself would blush. He is at present their Fortunatus' purse, the fund inexhaustible of argument and attack. He is their Lamp of Alacdin, by whose magic influence they are to realise their most magnificent expectations. He is the great Pivot of Archimedes, on which the lever is to be fixed, that will overturn the administration. But Decius is a man of honor, and would abemin te

What then must be the astonishment and the indignation of Lecius, when he sees this production not only profituted in its criginal shape to fedetal designs, but compleatly distorted from its original purport, misunderstood by fools and misrepresented by knaves? In bonest truth, is Decius the enemy of the administration?
