WESTMINSTER ELECTION. . Nov. 5.—At the close for the day, the umbers stood thus:

James Paul, Esq. Rt. Hon. R. B. Sheridan Sir Samuel Hood, K. B.

As Mr. Sheridan and his friends were returning to the Shakespeare, the crowd annoyed them in a most furious and savage manner; John Davenport, a butcher; with a marrow bone and cleaver, aimed at Mr. Sheridan's head a blow with the former weapon, which, if it had not been intercepted, would probably have been mortal. Mr Rhodes of Drury-lane, who was close to the fellow, arrested his arm, and in a great measure prevented the blow. He was immediately taken into custody, and carried to Bow-street; when this charge being made, the magistrates ordered him to be detained until M. Sheridan could conveniently at-

Never, certainly, has an English election been attended with such disgraceful scenes of riot as were yesterday exhibited in Covent Garden, by the rabble who favored Mr. Paul. This worthy gentleman has gained one point at least, by enlisting himself under the banners of a certain baronets whom he has determined "to follow to the scalloid:" he is sure to have the advantage of a settled and organized system of tumult and commotion, totally destructive to the general freedom of suffrage, which can be exercised by the voters of the opposite party only at the imminent hazard of life and limb. This is the system that was acted Brentford, at the two last elections for Middlesex. We do not consider the quence so much of attachment to the person at the head of it, as of general intimidation. A thousand voters have been known to poll in one day for Mr. Fox, in the information should be given. Westminst, in days of freedom without terror. Measures we hope, will be taken to freethe poll from terror in its luture progress.

bir Samuei Hood and Mr. Sheridan equally shared the insults of the rude rabble; and the former with a tear, was heard to observe, that he never expected. to witness so disgraceful a scene in Old England. Of him it may be said: Brave Hooi, thy enterprizing mind

To hoffie shores well loves to roam ; Eut, ah! t is thy fate to find The greatest enemies at home!

CONGRESS.
