If it be asked what has this mighty navy done to balance this expense? I limay, be answer ! ed, that comparatively speaking it has done ! where nothing was to be gained but blows and broken bones, and it has plundered the unarmed vessels of neutral nations, and this makes the Fell's Point.

thort history of its fervices. That the English government does not depend upon the navy to prevent Bonaparte making a descent upon England is demonstrated by the expensive preparations that government puts itseff to by land to repel it. And that the navy contributes nothing to the protection of commerce is proved by the fact that all the ports on the continent of Europe are shut by land against the commerce of England. Of what use then is this navy that has incurred fuch an enormous debt and which costs more than fixty-eight milliuns dollars annually to keep it up, which is three times more than all the gold and filver. that the mines of Peru and Mexico annually produce. Such a navy will always keep a nation poor. No wonder then that every feventh perfon in England is a pauper, which is the fact -The number of paupers now is 1,200,000.

Another evil to England attending this navy, belides the debt it has incurred, is, that iturains the nation of specie. More than half the materials that go in e the construction of a navy in England are procured from Rullia and Sweden; and ag the exports of English manufadures to those places are but small the balance must be paid in specie. If Bonaparte succeeds in all his plans I hope he will put an end to navies for the good of the world.

It is impossible to please those who are predetermined not to be pleased at the management of the business of national legislation. If am. gress move rapidly, they are accused with being rash and obsequious—if they proceed with him. cautious deliberation, they are said to be idle' and negligent. The following article is copied | sia-he does not understand Frenchfrom the Gazette of yesterday. It goes to throw odium upon the members of congress, because they have not rashly precipitated themselves into the passage of a law to, prohibit the importation of flaves into the United States. Has the. " Correspondent at Washington" reflected on the delicacy of the subject? There could not any question come before congrels which or improper use of the privilges hereby would require to be touched with a gentler hand. The interests of the fouthern and eastern states are so widely different with respect to negro flavery, that it will require the utmost difere tion so to frame a law as to make it agrocable to the planters of the fouth. It is a tender shord, and should be touched with judgment. An opinion may be formed of the importance which the people of the southern states attach to the privilege of importing flaves from tha: clause of the constitution which prevents congress from prohibiting the importation before amidst the vicissitudes of war. At the the year 1808. That provision, beyond all instance of these two great personages doubt, was infisted upon by the de legates in the convention from Virginia, North and South-Carolina, and Georgia. Hence the reason why congress proceed so sowly in the business; and every man of reflection will say they are wife in so doing; for it is better to proceed slowly and soberly, than by hasty measures to raise spirit of distatisfaction among the citizens of different parts of the Union :-

In what manner it will be modified, amongst so many, and when it will be again brought forward, it is indeed difficultto determine. The principal reason, however, for recommitting that they were not treated with violence the bill, was, that congress had no right to nor even indifference. sell persons imported, as slaver, and that, if they had it would be immoral and dangerous to sanction the principle of shoery. Mr. Findley even contended, that if congress had power to sell negroes brought into the United States they had the same power to declare that Irishmen, Dutchmen, and other foreigners, coming into the country, should be sold.

er Perhaps no bill was ever before con gress which experiented a more system atic opposition, or which was attacked under a greater variety of shapes, in all its different stages.
