Extract of a letter from New-Orleans, dated December 9.

"You will have heard that Gen. Wilkinfon has been here fome days.—His movements being of a military and defenfive nature, excited much curiofity for the caufe. To-day a full explanation was made. The governor this morning, having convened the merchants, announced, that Col Burr with a confiderable force, was defcended the river to the Miffiffippi territory, at Loftus's heights, a fmall diftance from the Weft-Florida line of the United States.

"He had got to Bayou Pierre (which is the fame mentioned in Pike's late tour) under the pretence that Gen. Wilkinfon, who at his request, had attended the meeting.—Warning fuch to whom their patriotifm was known, that he had called the meeting, in hopes that the merchants, difcouraged by the fmall encouragement, would relinquifh the unpleafant neceffity of refcrting to meafures.

"The General then rofe, and in a very handfome and impreffive manner, addreffed the meeting—he ftated from the proofs in his poffeffion, how much the Colonel would indeed be dangerous. He entered very minutely into the nature and object of Burr's undertaking. His firft point was to feize upon the city, in order to obtain the monies in the bank, which, with requifitions on the city, was to prepare an armament againft Mexico.

"He declared, that the plot had been communicated to him in confidence, under the expectation of his joining it. A clofe and intimate friendfhip had fubfifted between him and fome of the leaders of the treafon, and he lamented moft bitterly, that in the courfe of that intimacy, his character had been fo grofsly mifunderftood, as to imagine that he was open to corruption. He then openly denounced AARON BURR, as the leader of the felonie, although fupported by fome of the firft characters in the union.—He concluded by pledging his life in the defence of the city.

"An embargo has been the confequence of this meeting, and every preparation is making to defend the city. The people generally are indignant on the occafion."

The bill was ordered to be engroffed.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 16, 1807.

The events of every day convince us more and more of the propriety of what we faid a while ago—that "the public ought to fufpend their opinion relative to the accufations againft Gen. Wilkinfon, Daniel Clarke, Efq. [and others,] and wait till more information comes to hand." We fhould, indeed, go further, and fay, the public ought to be cautious how they credit informations (without proof) againft the integrity and loyalty of men, who, inſtead of feeming traitors, appear to be ſtrenuouſly engaged in employing efficient means to defeat treaſon and its adherents.

We can aſſure our readers that the following details are from the higheſt authority:—

That, ſo far from Gen. Wilkinſon's being concerned with Col. Burr, the truth is, the information which he received from the government of the United States, through the channel of a Lieutenant of the army, who left Natchez the 22d of October, and arrived at the ſeat of government in the preſident's own barge in the month of November: That although the preſident had (prior thereto) received information againſt Col. Burr, yet it was ſo vague and indefinite that he could not act upon it. That on the 5th November (ten days after the arrival of the lieutenant with Gen. Wilkinſon's letter, in conjunction with Gov. Claiborne and Capt. Shaw of the navy, ſeizing the city of New-Orleans in a manner ſcarcely to be paralleled, and making every preparation for the defence of that important city. That Burr's ſon-in-law had declared that a naval force was to appear in their aid at the mouth of the river; but as they named an American as the naval commander, and as it is well known that he is quiet and at his own home, it began to be believed that the tale of a naval force was fabricated for the purpoſe of gaining adherents. On application at the War Department, our letter ſays the anſwer of the Secretary was—that no late communications had taken place on the part of the United States. Our informant further ſays that it was expected the preſident would very ſoon lay all the information he had obtained before congreſs, reſpecting the diſhoneſt themes and intentions of Col. Burr—when the public will be convinced that the conduct of Gen Wilkinſon (ſo far as the information yet received exhibits facts) has been judicious, patriotic, and honorable.

Copy of a letter from Waſhington City, dated January 14, 1807.

Mr. —— writes to his friend (dating Chilicothe, 3d January) that gov. Tiffin has had much trouble, but has acted with effect in counteracting Burr's treaſonable plots, ſo far as his juriſdiction extends—but he fears that a ſtroke will be ſtruck before the energies of the general government can be drawn into action. Fourteen boats have been ſecured in Ohio.

The legiſlature of Kentucky were acting with cloſed doors, and were framing a law to authoriſe the gov. to act as in Ohio—but they will be too late, I fear: If Burr gets off, there is no impediment in his way to New-Orleans—there he will meet his fate; unleſs, as ſome conjecture, finding that he has failed in gaining over Wilkinſon, he ſhould proceed up the Red River, and either eſcape into the Spaniſh territory, or actually pretend to ſit down on Baſtrop's land.

Our Correſpondent at New-Orleans, under date of the 8th ult. ſays, "Commodore Shaw has purchaſed the fine coppered ſch'r Ranger, and intends to arm and man her immediately. The recruiting ſervice commenced ſome days ago." [N. Y. Gazette.

LONDON POLICE.

Bow-Street.—William Lyman, the ſon of the American Conſul, about ten years of age, was at a ſchool in the neighborhood of Hackney. On Monday one of the Ushers inflicted a very ſevere puniſhment upon him with a wanghee cane.—Early on Tueſday morning the youth made his eſcape from the ſchool to his father's houſe, in Birchin-lane.

On his father's hearing his ſtatement, and examining his body, he came to the Office, and made application to Mr. Bond and Sir William Parſons, the Magiſtrates, who diſpatched Rivett with a warrant, in a poſt chaiſe, to bring the Uſher before them. The officer returned with him with all poſſible ſpeed. The Conſul, with his ſon, and his Attorney, were in readineſs.—The youth's back was ſhewn to the Magiſtrates, when it appeared to be nearly one general maſs of bruiſes. The Magiſtrates cenſured very ſeverely the conduct of the priſoner.

Sir William Parſons obſerved that if it was poſſible for the youth to have committed an offence to call for ſuch a violent puniſhment, the Maſter ſhould have inflicted it, and not the priſoner; but reprobated ſuch a mode of puniſhment very ſeverely, recommended, as the moſt proper mode of puniſhing boys, to deprive them of play, make them to do an extra number of ſums, and learn extra taſks.

The priſoner appeared penitent for what he had done, and begged pardon; but the Conſul ſaid he could not poſſibly accept of it. He ſhould get a ſurgeon to examine his ſon's body, and ſhould proſecute the priſoner in the Crown Office. The priſoner was ordered to find bail for the aſſault. [London p. Oct. 20.]

A late account of Berlin ſays, that in 1804 it had 182,157 inhabitants, of whom 25,476 were in military ſervice. The population in one year increaſed 1651. It contained 7274 houſes. The births in that year were given at 6720, and deaths at 6018, of whom 1419 died of conſumptions, and 63 of the ſmall-pox. Berlin has above a fifth part of the population of Paris, having about 23 thouſand—Jena about 7000 and Weimar about 8000. Erfurt has 16,000—about a third of its population two hundred years ago.
