

In their veins, it would rush to their faces and color their cheeks with the blushes of shame. But they have none of the compound character about them; they are so far gone in turpitude that such detection and exposure merely serve to anger them. Let them chafe, then, whilst I, and pity with contemptuous finger, point at them as examples of infamy to be avoided by the rest of their fellow-countrymen.

We received by yesterday's mail, the inaugural speech of James Sullivan, lately elected Governor of Massachusetts. We regret that we have not room for the whole of it; the following extracts, however, contain the sentiments which will be most interesting to readers in this section of the Union—

"Government, in its nature, is a concentration of public opinion to a certain form of public rule. This may be maintained in a despotism, by terror; but in a republic, it must be supported by an attachment of the people to their country. By public virtue. To produce this attachment the powers of the government must be exerted, to give equal advantages to all its subjects: not to create wealth, or exclusive privileges to any; but in securing to all, respectively, as far as it can be done by general laws, well executed, the enjoyment of the various gifts which God bestows upon them. For to use the language of our declaration of rights, 'no man, or corporation, or association of men, have any other title to obtain advantages, distinct from those of the community, than what arises from the consideration of services rendered to the public.' Where the laws secure to every man the same privileges, to acquire and hold property, the wish to accumulate wealth by fair means, and honest industry, is inseparable from patriotism. Enterprize and industry are in the class of public virtues because they are the unfading source of wealth to a nation.

"A respect to the civil authority, a correct regard to the rights of others, and a ready obedience to the laws, confer, on a people, a dignity of character, which is intimately blended with the social virtues; and habitually becomes the strength of civil community.

"Should any one be daring enough to suggest the idea, that the people of Massachusetts are not, in the enlightened situation God has bestowed upon them, under the advantages they are favoured with, and the habits acquired from the manner of their education, competent to the support of a free government, by their suffrages, frequently exercised, such person ought to be restrained as a dangerous incendiary;—because, it is essentially wrong to speak, as to act treason. Every citizen has an unalienable right to express his opinion upon the administration of the government, and the conduct of his rulers. But there are certain primary principles, which constitute the leading, essential, distinguishing features of an elective republic. These are to be treated with solemn reverence, and supported by a religious respect.

"When we contemplate the immeasurable shores we give to the sea; the vast extent of territory our National Dominion spreads itself over, we are obliged to confess the error of a reliance on a standing army, for an effective defence against the invasion of a foreign enemy. To preserve the forms of war, with the principles and feelings of military discipline, some regular troops are necessary; but our defence must remain with the militia. They are, a perpetual guard against internal commotions, an incentive to shield a country against its external enemies. The soil must be protected by its owners. This description, includes all the people, because all have an equal right to acquire, and possess fee simple estates. Impressed with these sentiments, the militia shall have my unceasing attention throughout the year.

"Peace with all the world, is the great object of our national councils; yet, if we would maintain so invaluable a blessing, we must be prepared to meet every hostile aggression, and to repel every invading insult. A dependence, on any other power for assistance, will, finally involve us in difficulties, from which, we cannot extricate ourselves, without great expense and danger. A treaty of alliance must open a wide door to the influence of a foreign nation; it would weaken the natural pillars of our national independence.

"Europe, as the illustrious Washington has told us, 'has a set of primary interests, which to us, have none, or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns.' Those cautious sentiments have been carefully adopted by the present President. From the wisdom, firmness, and moderation of his measures, under the favour of God, we remain the quiet spectators, of those warring powers, which the situation of Europe, may have rendered expedient, or necessary amongst them; but by which they are deluged in blood and oppressed with expences.

"Should a suitable proportion of our militia in the United States, be trained to a proper degree of discipline, and be properly armed, though the first column of an invading enemy, might not be instantly repelled, yet the decisive appearance of victory would be soon exhibited on the standard of our union. It is true, that the art of war, like other arts, is to be most perfectly learned from practice, and experience; but this is a bloody, and an expensive method of acquiring knowledge. In a nation, where it is not revered, as an established truth, that war is the natural state of men; in a country, where no invasion is to be expected, but from the error, or rashness, not from the interest of a foreign power, the art of war may be sufficiently cultivated, at a moderate expence, by Military Schools, and otherwise, in time of peace. Each state in the nation has the same interest in the discipline of the militia of the others, as it has in that of its own; and therefore, there can be no impropriety in contemplating this, as a subject of national concernment. Whether you, Gentlemen, will conceive it to be your duty, to use your influence with Congress, on an affair of such magnitude, as far, as it shall comport with the national and state constitutions, or whether, you will turn your attention to the militia of your own State alone, I cheerfully submit to your wisdom. But this I venture to affirm, that all neglect or delay in this business, is incompatible with the safety of the Country.

"No foreign power, will dare to invade our Country, in a project of conquest, unless the United States, like the ancient republics, by controversies and animosities, amongst themselves, shall furnish their enemies with the hopes, as well as the means, of success. To preserve a union of interest, and sentiment, so absolutely necessary to our existence, as a nation, jealousies are to be laid aside, charity cherished, and a reciprocity of affection, and civility, to be exhibited. All the States must be the country of the citizens of each; and each State the Country of all. Our national union, glowing on the public opinion, is the best defence of our sovereignty; and those, who would check it there, would sever the root, from whence the tree of liberty draws, in copious streams, its principal nourishment."

A gentleman, who came passenger in the Anda, from London, assures us, that the conduct of Mr. MURKIN, has been highly approved of by the mercantile interest of that city;—that a public and very splendid Dinner was to be given him by the merchants, as a mark of their respect for his vigilant exertions in endeavouring to restore a friendly intercourse between that country and the United States.

London, April 17.—We have just received, by express, Hamburg and Altona Papers to the 17th inst. They bring intelligence from Constantinople to the 12th of March, from the French head quarters at Oterode to the 3d inst. and state that the siege of Stralsund has been raised.

VIENNA, March 28.—The following intelligence, dated the 2d of March, has been received from Constantinople.—On the 28th of February, the English attempted a landing on Prince's Island, but it failed. Their ships, on the occasion, is stated at 400 killed and wounded, and 200 taken prisoners. The following day, the fleet weighed anchor, and proceeded to the Dardanelles.

The preparations at Constantinople, continued with extraordinary activity. The French and Spanish Ambassadors furnished them by their assistance and advice. The Grand Signior's Council was made permanent. On the evening of the 1st of March, when the English Minister departed with the fleet, the negotiations were suspended; the English had till then waited in vain for reinforcements from the Black Sea.

The number of Turks who took up arms in Constantinople and its vicinity, amounted to 100,000. Public order was not in the least disturbed in that city. The Grand Signior had not shown the slightest disposition to leave the place, as had been falsely asserted.

BURR'S TRIAL.—General Wilkinson not having arrived, at Richmond, previous to the 3d instant, it is presumed, there were no new proceedings in this case, subsequent to the date of our former accounts. A Richmond paper, received on Saturday, is silent on the subject.

It has been supposed by many, that Burr would be tried at the present term;—this is a mistake. We believe we can say with certainty, that the only object contemplated, for the present, was the examination of such testimony by the grand jury as could enable it to decide, whether they would find a true bill against Colonel Burr. The trial, before a petit jury, will take place at the next term. We have heard this as a reason assigned for the non-attendance of the attorney general for the U. S. during the proceedings. The petit jury to try, is to be nominated from Wood county, Virginia, where the crime is said to have been committed.

Extract of a letter from Monte Video, dated March 2, 1807.

"We arrived at this port in November last, although it was then strictly blockaded by the English, they then holding Maldonado.—On our arrival a guard of soldiers was immediately put on board, and all hands kept on board for six weeks. On the 3d of February this place was taken by storm, after a siege of fourteen days. The port is now full of shipping. All kinds of goods are at reduced prices. The port is open to neutrals for eight months, for all articles, Dry Goods excepted, with permission to take the produce of this country. Buenos Ayres, it is said, has declared independence and formed a REPUBLIC. The Vice Roy is arrested as a Traitor and for desertion, having deserted this place with a number of troops at the commencement of the siege. The English have here ten ships of war and six thousand troops. They have demanded a surrender of Buenos Ayres, but have been answered in the negative."

EXTRACT FROM THE LONDON GAZETTE.

Dunwich-street, March 11, 1807.
Lord Viscount Howick, his Majesty's principal secretary of state for foreign affairs, has this day notified to the ministers of friendly and neutral powers resident at this court, that, in consequence of the recent proceedings and present position of the enemy upon the continent, which enables him to command the rivers Elbe, Weser and Ems, his Majesty has judged it expedient to re-establish the most rigorous blockade at the entrance of those rivers, and to maintain and enforce the same, according to the usages of war, acknowledged and allowed in similar cases.
