In the mean while it is evident that Bonaparte seriously purposes to remedy the fault he has committed in the eyes of military men, by advancing to far into Poland, with Strallund, Colberg, and Dantzig remain in the power of an enemy who has also the command of the sea.

But to come next home in my remarks. While the siege of Dantzig is carried on with fury, that of Colberg repeats for a moment and attempts are industriously made to disengage the King of Sweden from the Coalition; but to no purpose.

Here we see a Monarch, who has already lost the greater part of his States, and the remainder of which are actually attacked by the enemy, sending his bell Generals with a considerable force, to defend the dominions of a Sovereign out lately his adversary, when threatened by the common foe.

Sweden having been found incorruptible it is now deemed necessary to collect a large force on this frontier of Germany. On Sunday last, Marshal Bruue received, by a courier from Finken-

I have endeavored to represent what is thought here to be the military plan of the enemy. This sketch, if not quite correct, justifies the remark of one of our Journalists, that the late events in Poland have refuted the arts of war to its former credit.

This day the following letter was received by Richard E. Lee, Mayor of Norfolk, from Commodore Douglass.

SIR, I beg leave to represent to you, that having observed in the newspapers, a resolution made by a committee on the 29th ult. prohibiting any communication between his Britannic Majesty's consul at Norfolk, and his ships lying at anchor in Lynnhaven Bay; and this being a measure extremely hostile, not only in depriving the British consul from discharging the duties of his office, but at the same time preventing me from obtaining the information so absolutely necessary for his majesty's service.

You must be perfectly aware that the British flag never has or never will be insulted with impunity. You must also be aware that it has been and still is in my power to obstruct the whole trade of the Chesapeake, since the late circumstances, which I have deified from, trussing that general unanimity would be restored.

I enclose you two letters to the British consul at Norfolk, which you will be pleased to forward him.

To which the Mayor returned the following answer.

SIR, I have received your menacing letter of yesterday this moment. The day on which this answer is written ought of itself to suffice, to prove to the subjects of your sovereignty that the American people are not to be intimidated by menace, or induced to adopt any measures, except by a sense of their perfect propriety. Seduced by the false show of sincerity, they may be sometimes surprised and slaughtered while unprepared to resist a supposed friend. That delusive security, however, is now passed forever. The late occurrence has taught us to confide our safety no longer to any thing but to our own force.

The same channels thro' which you have derived the intelligence rated by yourself, must also have announced to you that the act of which you complain, is an act of individuals, and not of the government.

The letters directed to the British consul have been forwarded to him.

Richard Evans Lee, Mayor of the Borough of Norfolk.
