is character valuable? On this point I will not insult you with argument. There are certain things, to argue which is treason against nature. The author of our being did not intend to leave this point afloat at the mercy of opinion, but with his own hand has he kindly planted in the soul of man an instinctive love of character. This high sentiment has no affinity to pride. It is the ennobling quality of the soul: and if we have hitherto been elevated above the ranks of all surrounding creation, human nature owes its elevation to the love of character. It is the love of character for which the poet has sung, the philosopher toiled, the hero bled. It is the love of character which wrought miracles in antient Greece:—the love of character is the eagle on which Rome rose to empire. And it is the love of character animating the bosom of her sons, on which America must depend in those approaching crises that may "try men's souls." Will a jury weaken this our nation's hope? Will they, by their verdict, pronounce to the youth of our country, that character is scarce worth possessing?

"If these considerations are disregarded, let the jury respect at least the public peace. Let them not drive the defamed to madness;—Let them not compel him to become the avenger of his own wrongs—to seize with his own hand the sword of justice. I wish to be understood: I allude not to this particular case, but speak in general terms. We read of that philosophy which can smile over the destruction of property—of that religion which enables its possessor to extend the benign look of forgiveness and complacency to his murderers. But it is not in the soul of man to bear the laceration of slander. The philosophy which could bear it, we should despise. The religion which could bear it, we should not desire—but we should be constrained to say that "our kingdom was not of this world." Man when exasperated will have redress;—he ought to have redress. And it will be ever the temple of justice, and spread before it her bleeding character, they insult him with mere nominal damages; if they stamp on the record the tormenting declaration that his character is worth little or nothing—he will not stay to enter the sanctuary of justice—he will not submit to be insulted. He will resort to other means of satisfaction. He will resort to what are called honorable means:—or to assault and battery:—or to the destruction of property;—or to the midnight dagger."

A bill is introduced into the legislature of Pennsylvania, to prevent the circulation in that state, of bank bills of other states, of less value than five dollars.

William Kelly and William Howard have been elected directors in the Farmer's Bank of Maryland, on the part of the state, for the ensuing year.

Messrs. Gilbert & Dean state, in the last Boston papers, that in the course of thirteen days, 33 counterfeit Bank bills, amounting to 1703 dollars have been presented to them at their lottery office—among the number are 3 fictious bills, purporting to be of Maryland Bank.

Indian Vegetable Specific,
A certain cure for venereal complaints.

Thousands of our fellow-citizens have received benefit from the above Medicines when reduced to the last stage of disease, and many families of the first respectability have given public testimony of the astonishing cures performed with the above preparations.—The proprietors are well assured that a single trial of any article here enumerated will convince the most prejudiced person of its utility.

Pamphlets containing cases of cures, may be had gratis at the above place of sale, sufficient to confirm our assertion. Were we inclined to publish all the certificates which are in our possession, we might fill a folio volume: but we never mention the names of any persons but those who are well known to be citizens of strict veracity, and then not without their approbation.

Those Medicines have been made known for a number of years to the public, and nothing can speak more in their favor that the rapid sales—to detect counterfeits it is necessary to inform the public that they must be particular in applying as above, and observe that none can be genuine without the signature of Richard Lee & Son.

N. B.—Each and every Medicine above enumerated have got their directions, describing their mode of use in the most perfect manner.
