

Canting Harmony, and the like inconsistent Similes and Epithets. In and about A—likewise,] some unhappy half finish'd Poets, thro' the feverish Rage of poetical Fury, having so effectually lost their Sight, as to be quite blind to all the astonishing Charms of the Fair Sex, especially their backward Beauties, which are the most striking, as a smooth musical Poet has lately most melodiously fung; this wonderful Medicine has effectually cured their Blindness, and restored them to their right Senses: In fine, the Virtues and Operations of this Medicine, like the Female Charms

The Receipt.

Take half a Grain of the South-East and by East Side of the Pith of common Discretion, two Grains of moderate vulgar Sense and Solidity, gathered exactly an Hour and two Minutes before Sunrise, half a Dram of the inside Bark of solid Thought and Reflection, three Drams of common Modesty, half an Ounce of well-timed Diffidence, calcined in the Fire of Self-Examination, and a Pound of honest Industry and Diligence, in any lawful Calling or Employ you please; beat all stoutly in a Mortar well propp'd with a good Understanding, and when all is reduced to a Powder, give it frequently only to the Quantity of half a Dram for a Dose; taking care all the while it operates, to stop well all the Crevices and Cracks of the Patient's intellectual Chamber, or Cranium (to use a Term of Art), lest the poisonous Blast and Air of Ignorance, Self-Conceit, and Idleness, should get Access, and frustrate the Operation of the Medicine; If thus used, it will in a little Time bring the Patient to a good Habit of Mind, so as that he shall neither heedlessly fall in Love at improper Seasons, or in improper Places; for Example, when bearing a Sermon, or while in Church, or vainly imagine himself a Poet, and fall to making of Verfes, when he knows nothing at all of the Matter.

PHILAETHES.
