To the Publisher of the MARYLAND GAZETTE.

S I R,

Please to insert in your Paper, the French King's THANKS to the Roman Catholics in Great-Britain, and oblige

Your constant Reader,

PHILETHERUS.

My very good Friends,

I MIGHT be thought justly unpardonable, if, at a Time when all the World is sensible of the immense Services you have done me, I only should be silent, or seem to neglect what has given me too deep and lasting Impressions of Respect and Gratitude, ever to be forgotten. If I should endeavour to recount all the numerous Obligations I have to you, I should neither know when to begin, nor where to make an End. Your Conduct, in whatever Light I view it, gives the most unspeakable Delight to my Mind: Your Generosity presents me even with the Image of something romantic, and convinces me, at last, that such a true and sincere Friendship as yours, will not only lead one to love his Neighbour as, but better than himself. You have clearly demonstrated, to me at least, that to promote my Interest, and aggrandize my Family, you are ready to sacrifice your own Country, and to entail perpetual Slavery upon it. If I look back to the Days of that immortal Man, Louis XIV, our Royal Great Grandfather, I find him surrounded with the Civilities of your Predecessors, and highly indebted to them for many Marks of their kind Regards. When Things seem'd to have an ill Aspect (for magna est Veritas) on his Side, when the Allies were pressing forward in a strait Line to Paris, when every Thing he could do had been experienced too weak to stop the Course of Victory, when the British Credit was at full Height, and his sunk into nothing, when the English were within View of an End of their Labours, and he of his Glory. Then they distinguish'd themselves in the Good Old Cause of Absolutism and Unlimited Monarchy. They were too generous not to lend an helping Hand to a Monarch in the proper Sense of the Word; and by their happy Management disgraced that General, a saint whom neither Force nor Fraud, neither the bravest Troops nor the strongest Intrenchments, availed any Thing. They rais'd such a prodigious Outcry against the Administration; they press'd so vehemently for Alterations, as to throw down the Public Credit, and to break the Measures of the Confederacy.

I HAVE often entertained and feasted my Mind with this admirable Picture, and tho' I once persuaded myself it was imitable, yet I now with Pleasure observe, that it has not only been equal'd, but even exceeded by you their worthy Descendants. You, my dear Friends, have continued true to my Interest under greater Difficulties and Discouragements than your Predecessors. You have ever exceeded my Hopes and my Thanks. There is not any Person, or Set of Persons, in Great Britain, who are disaffected to the House of Bourbon, but you have bestowed upon them Marks of your highest Displeasure, and encouraged both to sink their Credit and their Power; nay, to burning is your Zeal, that you resent every Aperson cast upon me by my Enemies among you, as an Insult offered to yourselves. There is not, on the contrary, any, whose Principles or Practices tend to my Advantage, but they have received ample Testimonies of your Respect and Good nature. By your generous Address you have gain'd over to my Interest Numbers of Heretics, under such Pretences as from any other Hands, would have pass'd for mere Banter and Insult. When to facilitate my Conquests, and to pave the Way to Universal Monarchy, a Rebellion was necessary in Scotland, you, mes tres cheries Amis, contrary to my Expectations (but not being seem'd to be a Difficulty for your Virtue to surmount), had sett at my Service. And if the Sea in Blessings of a Kindness mightily enhances the Value of it, never was there a Service more valuable: But you seem to be truly sensible of the Duties that are owing to a Monarch born by Divine Right to Universal Empire.

BLESSED be the Engines to which so glorious Events are owing. Republican, Antimonarchical, Danger of the Church, Non-Resistance, Usurpation, Antient Royal Line, Hereditary and Divine Right, Words of Force and Energy! and the more so, the less they are understood! How great are my Obligations to all these! We know that your late Revolution was an antimonarchical resisting Revolution, and diametrically opposite to that divine hereditary Right, by which we Monarchs reign. You cannot, therefore, confer a greater Obligation on me, than to keep up those Terms and important Words, by which my Tyranny is supported, and your own antient Tyranny hopes to be restored; and to sink the Reputation of those resisting Principles and Liberty of the Subject, upon which your new Establishment is found'd, and your old Royal Line is excluded. I, for my Part, shall be always ready to improve your Services to my own Advantage, to the increasing of my own Power, and to employ that in the Cause of your antient Royal Family, upon every fair Opportunity, especially of extending my own Dominion.

I CANNOT dismiss this Subject, without paying my Compliments, in a particular Manner, to those Reverend and Wordy Gentlemen the Jesuits among you, who have so remarkably signalized themselves in my Service.

Venerable Fathers,

ALL Reserve and Restraint apart, let me treat you with that Openness and Familiarity which becometh true Friends. You have fully answered that Character of Sagacity and Cunning, that Craftiness and Art, by which your Oath is so much magnify'd all the World over. And as your Parts are so amazingly quick to discover the Means, so your Industry has been no less indefatigable in the Application of them to promote my Interest. I cannot dissemble the Satisfaction I have received, when I have so often seen with what a constant and unwearied Diligence, and at the same Time, with what artful Caution, you not only promoted Disaffection to your Government, and suppos'd antient hereditary Right; but, by your dextrous Managements, likewise engaged a Multitude of Heretics in the same Cause. The young Men from the University; and the old Men that has been long in the World, have been made by you to blow the Trumpet of Sedition. You have reconcil'd them to that unparalleled Contradiction of rebelling against Obedience, and resisting out of Zeal for Non-Resistance. Divine Hereditary Right, Heaven by Non-Resistance! Words terrible to the Protestant Successor! How much have I received from them, and how much more shall do I expect!

I SHOULD seem to question the Strength of your Understanding, did I offer to make any Apology, to you for that Passage of the Prince's Manifesto, wherein he declares, that my Brother of England's sole Intention is, to restore all his Subjects in the full Enjoyment of their Rights on Laws and Liberties. You very well know, in what Promises to ever found Policy or Prudence might induce me to make, he could not however perform any in Prejudice of the Church. This I can assure you of from the Authority of your late Holy Father, Pope Clement XI, who, in Tome II, page 179, of his Acts, published in Folio at Rome, 1724, declares, "all Promises whatsoever, or stipulations made, in Favour of
