

About half an hour after five Yesterday morning they came out of the prison; after having been at prayers the greatest part of the night; from whence they were conducted to the Parade in St. James's Park, attended by the chaplains of the first and second regiments, for which place they were joyn'd by a detachment of ten men from each company of the three regiments. After staying there some time, they were conducted with drums bearing, attended; along the Bird-Leg Walk, to Constitution Hill, to the fatal stone, at which they arrived presently after eight o'clock; and there they pray'd about a quarter of an hour, often looking down the park in hopes of a reprieve, which before execution was thought to be coming, as a horseman came riding up very hastily; but they were soon undeceived in this opinion by a cousin of South's, who brought a decisive answer to their petition in the negative, after receiving which and embrasing him, he pull'd the cap over his eyes, as did also the servant, when the men ordered to do the execution were brought up; viz. six, and a reserve of six more, who were to fire in case of signs of life. The signal was first given to advance, present, and then fire, when South's head was shattered all to pieces, and received another ball in his breast, which also shattered his left hand all to pieces, and scattered the fingers about the ground, as was his brains, &c. The servant only received a wound, rather a graze, on the side of the right breast, but fell, and moved and cried out with great strength, as to be heard by numbers of people, Lord, receive my Soul! Mercy! O Lord! O Lord! when the rebels put an end to his life by lodging several balls in his body. They were put into coffins with their cloaths on, and buried in two different holes dug for that purpose near the stone. They both behaved with great decency and composure, and to outward appearance died true penitents.

Augt 26. Monday last, sailed the Maid and Blandford men of war, both bound to Boston in New England, the former having on board a great sum of money for that place, and the latter to be armed Cruisers.

A fleet of ships is said to be going up the Baltic; and that Lord Anson will command the same, and hoist his flag on board the Lancaster man of war.

Augt 31. We are informed from Rotterdam, that the British inhabitants are taxed extravagantly; that a high duty is laid on English Vessels seeking freight; and many not permitted to take in any goods at all, several having come away empty. But Mynheers ought to be told, that their beginning so early will not, in any sense, elude the good intentions of the British parliament in regard to the intended fishery.

Spt. 16. On Friday was held a board of admiralty, when a number of African sailors who were employed by admiral Griffon to navigate his squadron from the East Indies, attended their lordships with a petition for a speedy payment of their wages, and passports to return home.

It is said his grace the duke of Somerset has been pleased to subscribe two hundred pounds towards carrying on the Scotch fisheries; and we hear, that other noble personages are encouraging the said undertaking.

Spt. 21. On Tuesday night the persons in custody for attempting to export looms, engines, &c. for the manufacuring of silk, &c. were examined before the secretaries of state, when four were order'd into close confinement; and the rest discharged.
