THE RING MY MOTHER WORE. It is not set with precious gem.

Yet more than jeweled diadem I prise this dear old-feshioned ring. She laid it in my trembling hand And bade me wear it evermore: There's magic in its narrow band-The wedding-ring my mother wore. Two names in letters old and dim.

That time and use have worn away,

'Tis but a quaint and simple thing,

Are graven in its narrow rim, . The records of a vanished day. These names are writ on marble now, The parted twain have met once more This ring records each solemn yow— The wedding-ring my mother wore. Dear patient hand that lies at rest! Dear ring that binds my soul to her,

Be this my future holy quest To see in it, God's messenger My passport to the city fair. When this fantastic scene is o'er; Dear emblem of our circle there-The wedding-ring my mother wore.

DEMENT'S BATTERY.

of the brigade in support, the enemy gave way in utter confusion to be crushed as it were between the upper and nether millstone, for the other two divisions of Ewell's corps had been following fast upon the heels of the retreating army. Now, on the final charge, such was the severity of the Federal fire there were but two men out of the complement of twenty-four able to serve a gun—the one on the bridge had all of its complement of men killed or wounded except one corporal (William May) and a private whose name is not recollected. These two men fired the last round at the discomfited enemy. Of course the ability of this section of a battery to withstand for so long the assaults of a gallant infantry column was greatly owing to the fact that the infantry had no artillery to hinder or paralyze the aim of the gunners, for, as has heen referred to above. Milroy had abandoned every piece of artillery and every wagon attached to his army in order to make his escape good.
