THE BALTIMORE PUBLIC AROUSED. The recent brutal murder in Baltimore of a man named Logue by another named Christopher in a low bawdy house saloen, in the delectable locality of Josephine street, has aroused the indignation of the right-thinking people as to the absolute necessity of a stringent highlicense law to control the sale of liquor. The saloon appears to have been little else than an addenda to houses of ill-repute, an "all-night" saloon, where the low and vicious of both sexes congregate after that witching hour when churchyards are said to yawn. There does not seem to be a doubt that had there have been a stringent license law, or had even the saloon have been closed at a proper hour, the murder would have occurred. It is not enough as a palliative that the parties are of but little account in the community, the morals thereof suffer just as much as though they were. The funeral of the unfortunate man took place on Sunday, 30th, and, it is said, was attended by nearly every prominent "sport" and a large number of the demi-monde of the town-to the amount of about thirty carriage loads .--They testified their appreciation of the deceased by attending his funeral. The perfect facility with which licenses to sell liquors may be obtained under the laws of the State, is partially responsible for the crime. All any one has to do is to appear before the Clerk of a Court with a recommendation of two freeholders. Then he swears before the Clerk that he expects to provide "six beds and sufficient covering therefor!" more than is necessary for the use of his family; and expects to maintain "stabling and provender sufficient for six horses!" &c., and the thing is done. This is for the usual ordinary in the country. In ELLRIDGE SUTTON, the city the facility to obtain a license is even | SAMUEL MILLER, more simple.

The public mind is being worked up on this matter, and there does not seem to be a doubt that the Legislature the coming winter will amend the license laws to cover the advanced state of public opinion upon this important sub-A GREAT PRICE FOR A GREAT

Thirty years after being painted Millet's famous work, "The Angelus," sold yesterday in TER BOOTS AND SHOES, and it will pay to order

Paris, as the cable informs us, at the opening of early. the great Secretan picture sale for $110,600, the highest price ever paid for a modern painting, and over $50,000 more than was ever paid for a modern work at auction. And yet, so strange is fate to men of genius, the painter, who died but fourteen years ago, after a life in which the struggle against poverty was almost continuous, bound himself the year after he produced this masterpiece to give up all his work for three years for an allowance of $2,400 a year. During Millet's lifetime when "The Angelus," for which he had received but five hundred dollars, sold for ten thousand dollars, he modestly spoke of the price as a sensational one and disclaimed all responsibility for the transaction. And now, while his widow is unable to keep over her head the roof of the Barbizon cottage that was his, the government of his country buys his most famous work after a spirited competition with Americans for far more than he ever carned in his sad lifetime.
