civilized world. Hence, the good people here were not at al prepared for the intense interest in the prizefight, which was exhibited, not alone by the roughs and the rabble, but by the better classes of our community, as well. They could not understand the eager enthusiasm of the multitudes of respectable people who blocked up the streets in front of our newspaper offices during the fight, anxiously awaiting the reports of it, and sustehing up the extra editions, with so much avidity. Nor was their wonder at all lessened to learn that all through the length and breadth of the land, and elsewhere, besides, similar proceedings were taking place. So, the state of affairs thus disclosed to them

The gladiatorial shows of the old Romans, the great games of the Greeks, the cruel performances of the Orientals, and the barbarous practices of the American Indians, are all of a piece, and declare the ferocious blood of which all the nations of the earth were made. The one difference between them and us, is, that they knew no better, having never been taught any higher morality; while we have been enightened, and are quite conscious of the brutality of such sport. And if with our eyes so Central Committee for Baltimore county would opened we still keenly relish displays of this be required to call new primaries, and these horrible nature, why, we are vastly more culpawould very likely be called to take place on ble than even the most degraded of our muscuthe same days that the primaries for delegates | lar old predecessors.

To be sure, a great deal of the interest in the present brutal encounter was created by the fact of the great amount of betting which the occasion provoked. But this consideration does not better the case in any degree whatever. For betting is only a species of gambling, which itself is branded as a crime by most civilized nations. And if people must indulge their propensity for wagering, why should they seize upon so demoralizing a spectacle as a deliberate fight, in which beings calling themselves men try to pound each other into a jelly, or even to produce death, while there are any other sports in which the chance element is members of the Committee from the Districts available? Or if there really must be betting, people might bet about the weather, which is sufficiently uncertain in these days to include all sorts of chances. But if ty for the use of presses, which Congress had nothing suits us so well as a prize-fight, the provided for with the expectation, of course,

Shipley in his communication to last week's Journal, upon the continually discussed question: "Is Life Worth Living?" clude the possibility of his giving the matter. Mr. Shipley makes life a very expensive experiment, at any rate; and a dreary one, besides; but there are some little mistakes in his price, and say that if Mr. Wanamaker will not calculations, which have an unfavorable effect change his mind they will carry the messages upon the results at which he arrives. And there is quite another side to the story, which he, and most other persons leave out of the count, though it is well worthy of being considered, as it makes a totally different showing

as to the actual value of life. According to Mr. Shipley's estimate it will cost a man more than $82,000 to maintain himself for fifty years, though it seems that no alcondition there, as is evidenced by the loud lowance has been made for the furnishing of his house, or for the wages of servants: both of complaints which every day arise. But even as to this sum, Mr. Shipley's calculations are all at sea. With regard to his first item, that of food, it is by no means necessary for him to spend anything like the sum he mentions upon his diet. Twenty-five cents a meal is more than the food actually costs, for otherwise the restaurant keeper could not make a fortune by serving meals at that price. Most persons in this country, even down to hod-carriers, are extravagantly wasteful. And when we look at it, it seems very ludicrous that any one should want Samuel Cooper, principal, and James Reynolds, any specified time, so many hours or minutes a day, to sit down and be definitely and regularly happy, when one can find pleasure in almost everything, and carry his happiness around John T. Whatever the sort of work we undertake to do, we should take a pride and pleasure in trying to excel in it. The farmer to bring up his land, and raise good crops and fine stock. The professional man to stand at the head of his class. The busness man to keep a fine stock of goods, or build himself up a character for integrity and fair dealing. The manufacturer to turn out only the best goods. The mechanic to do only good work; and everybody to do his full duty and make himself trustworthy, and his services valued. Anyone and everyone can do this; and it used to be the pride and ambition of most well-meaning people to accomplish it. But the man who regards his work of any kind as mere drudgery, which he does because he must, and takes no delight in it, is as much a slave as though he were as black as the ace of spades, and had shackles on all his limbs.

Then, besides one's daily business, there are pleasures scattered along one's pathway almost all the way through life. There is the pleasure of caring for one's friends, and of knowing that we possess their regard. The pleasure of working for those dependent upon us; of doing little acts of unexpected kindness; and of trying to brighten, if with only a kind word, the lives of those

There was the regular street parade in the morning, which made a fine display. A feature was a musical instrument called the steam ently tuned steam whistles. It played quite a number of familiar tunes, such as "Yankee Doodle," "The Blue Bells of Scotland," &c. The circus was a good one, notwithstanding the fact that one of the Chambersburg papers spoke of it as "Old Johnny's Show."
