Moetig. THE EMPTY SLEEVE. A frosted head, and empty sleeve-Ah! what a tale they tell Of the midnight march, the wild foray,

The parting kiss, the last embrace.

The battle's lurid hell!

The arming for the strife. The hurried march in the flush of youth, For a menaced Nation's life. Doff your hat to the missing arm !

Honor the dangling blue: If it had not bled, ah! what would be This lovely land to you? The Stars and Stripes beside the pines-Above Nevada's snows-The same proud flag beside the sea

Where the orange blossoms blows! Ah! greater than the Legion's cross On breast of marshal true. And grander than King Henry's crest Is the empty sleeve of blue! No crown was in the scales of war When that good arm was lost: A Nation was the prize it won,

And countless tears the cost. With Pride I watched the gallant ranks Go by the other day; The empty sleeve in silence told

How heroes met the gray. The stirring fife, the rattling drum, Made music on the air, And over them in glory waved Our banner proud and fair.

I know not where the good arm lies, On land or 'neath the sea: I know but this-I ask no more-Twas lost for you and me. If you had watched the noble ranks With me you could believe That the proudest badge a man can wear
