For the use of the state for the fiscal year of 1822.

In this view of the finances of the state, and especially when taken in connexion with the unprecedented pressure of the times, your committee does not perceive the necessity of resorting, at the present session of the legislature, to taxes either direct or indirect; they therefore decline submitting any project for that purpose. They are however induced to believe, as well from representations which have come before them, as by a recurrence to the practice of other states, that a considerable revenue may be obtained by means of state lotteries; but without entering into a detail of the modifications of the present act of
