o meals a day than on three ug wight into day—that is, it night and sleeping in the day is not mean that the person is doomed to an early grave.

I who work nights may live to a good old age. Wim. Cullen Bryant was accustomed to work nights and attained a ripe old age. Still I consider that people who work during the day and sleep during the night are better off. One thing is certain, a person must have sleep at sometime, whether it is at night or during the day. The average person ought to have eight hours' sleep. When I was young I read than Napoleon only took four hours' sleep in twenty-feur. I thought that no great man needed more than four hours, so that was all I took. I found out the error of that idea later. "The great mortality from phthisis or consumption is due to the varying temperature and the foul air breathed. It is contagious, and healthy persons can contract it. The sputum, or expectoration, becomes dry and is converted into a powder, which floats in the air and may be inhalled. The next ten years will show a great diminution in deaths from phthisis. Hair Imbedded in Wood.

Evidence of somebody's firm belief ln Evidence of somebody's firm belief in the old superstition about boring a hole in thrifty tree, placing therein a lock of one's hair and paring of the nails and then carefully plugging the hole, in the hope that as soon as the deposit became solid wood all fear of future hesdache lope that as soon as the deposit became solid wood all fear of future headache and other ills would be dispelled from the mind of him whose lock of hair was contributed to the tree, came to light in the quaint town of Wells one day this week. While sawing shingles from a tree that recently stood near the Boston and Maine station in that town, William Maxwell came across just such an exhibition of human deposit. The nails and dark brown hair were firmly imbedded in the solid wood, being separated only when the machinery converted the wood into shingles. The hair and nails could be traced in four of the shingles cut from that particular part of the tree. It is hoped that the bringing to light of these emblems in so rude a manner har not broken the charm.—Losiston (Me.)
