"There is dissatisfaction with the State school as at present organized. The State school, it is said, tends to eliminate religion from the minds and hearts of the youth of the country. This is my grievance against the State schools of to-day. Believe me, my Protestant fellow citizens, that I am absolutely sincere when I now declare that I am speaking for the weal of Protestantism as well as for that of Catholicism. I am a Catholic, of course, to the finest fibre of my heart, unflinching and uncompromising in my faith. But God forbid that I desire to see in America the ground which Protestantism occupies exposed to the chilling and devastating blast of unbelief. Let me be your ally in stemming the swelling tide of irreligion, the death knell of Christian life and of Christian civilization.

"The State school is non-religious ignores religion. There is and there can be no positive religious teaching where the principle of non-sectarianism rules. It follows, then, that the child will grow up in the belief that religion is of minor importance, and religious indifference will be his creed. The great mass of children receive no first lessons and attend no Sunday school, and the great mass of the children of America are growing up without religion. The State does not teach religion; but for the sake of its people and for its own sake it should permit and facilitate the action of the Church. But it hinders this action. Let the State look to itself. The mind which it polishes is a two-edged sword —an instrument for good or an instrument for evil. It were fatal to polish it without the assurance that in all it shall be an instrument poker in all its various forms and attractions, from the small calibre of a freezeout game to that in which each chip stands for a gold piece, and rises with a geometrical ratio after the ante; reckless playing, and drunken playing, with an occasional cinch game; miners, professionals, laborers, business men, all in the throng, and representatives of each in the play. The great American game seems to have a tight grip on the Arizonian, and the territory may well be termed the hub of Pokerdom.

Speculation is a round game; the players see little or nothing of their cards at first starting.
