this country—the people—and then it will be settled right. The War Department has given out a carefully prepared statement comparing the imports and exports of the Phillippine Islands for the seven months ending January 31, 1901, with the same period a year previous. This statement is intended, of course, to show that United States ownership and control of the islands is benefiting our trade but a careful study of the figures presented brings out little to encourage that When the number of American soldiers and civilians on the islands is considered, the increase in the imports from the United States from $890,010 to $1,493,488 seems absurdly small, especially when the rease, during the same period in imports from Europe was from $5,-270,766 to $8,974,183. In the exports from the islands the United States makes a still poorer showing, the later seven months showing only
