III. Whereas sundry collectors of the tax have been executed, and others are liable to execution, for the respective balances due from them to the state, and it appearing to this general assembly to be repugnant to the dictates of humanity and sound policy to proceed with the utmost rigour of the law against the said collectors, and their securities, whereby they, with their families, will be involved in the greatest distress, and may be reduced to the most abject state of poverty, without producing any substantial advantage to the state: And whereas it is reasonable, and accords with good government, that a power should be lodged somewhere in the recess of the general assembly, to afford relief in such cases of extreme hardship as cannot admit of delay, and would merit legislative interposition; BE IT ENACTED, That all executions issued against the said collectors, and their securities, are hereby suspended until the first day of March next.

IV. AND BE IT ENACTED, That the governor and the council be and they are hereby authorised to suspend or countermand executions already issued against the collectors of the tax; and to prevent executions being sued out against them respectively.
