An additional supplementary act to the act, entitled, An act for building a new church in the city of Annapolis.

Preamble.

WHEREAS the trustees appointed to build the said church were directed by the aforesaid original act to build an elegant church, adorned with a steeple, the expence whereof was estimated at six thousand pounds current money, one half thereof to be raised by subscription, and the other half to be paid by the public and the parishioners equally: And whereas it appears to this general assembly, that the said trustees, in obedience to the aforesaid act, in the year seventeen hundred and seventy-six, purchased materials to a large amount, most of which, during the war, were taken and carried away, partly by individuals, and partly by the order of the council of safety, for the construction of batteries, barracks, and other public uses; that during the war, the said trustees were obliged to desist from the further prosecution of the work; that by a supplementary act passed in the year seventeen hundred and eighty-five, the said trustees were directed to proceed on the execution of the trust reposed in them, and to call on all persons who had any of the materials, and obligate them to account and pay for the same, and to open new subscriptions; that in compliance with the directions of the said act, the said trustees have procured a liberal subscription, to the amount of three thousand four hundred and fifty-four pounds,
