 To purchase Briceon Wills No. 56.
WHEREAS, it is highly essential that a work which treats of subjects highly important to those who have any concern in affairs of a testamentary nature, should receive a wide and extensive circulation, for the purpose of preventing many unhappy mistakes which would otherwise frequently occur, when men who are entirely unacquainted with such matters undertake to make their own wills, which of all other instruments require the most mature deliberation, and which often give rise to family feuds and dissensions, when the intention of the testator is so obscure that different interpretations may be given to the same clause;
