

The committee however have not confined themselves solely to the policy which should govern the senate upon questions of this kind. They believe that the great constitutional security which protects the property of our citizens directly and imperatively prohibits the passage of any bill which shall in effect declare that the property which by all the laws of the and is vested in one individual shall cease to be his and shall thereafter be the property of another.

Which was read. By order, THOS. W. LOOCKERMAN, Com. Clk.
