The want of a Place to walk and exercise in, and to receive the Benefit of the fresh Air; the Want of a Well or Pump, which would furnish the poor Prisoners with a sufficient Quantity of cool, clean Water, not only to wash and keep themselves clean, but slack their Thirst, are very great Additions to their Miseries; and the Want of a proper Receptacle for their Excrements, occasions a constant Stench, especially in hot Weather, intolerable to the poor Creatures who are confin'd near it, and indeed, dangerous and offensive to others: And should the Number of Prisoners be considerable, and they be afflicted with any Epidemical or Pestilential Distemper, your Committee apprehend, that the Excrements of Persons to afflicted, lying expos'd in the Manner already mentioned, may very probably occasion the Spreading the Infection. This our own Reason suggested to us, and we are confirmed in the Justness of the Observation, by the Opinion of several Phisicians, whom we have consulted on this Occasion. In a Word, your Committee look on the Goal of Annapolis, in it's present Condition, to be a Place of almost constant and uninterrupted Torment, to such poor unhappy Men as are confined therein.

Your Committee therefore humbly conceive, that such Measures ought to be taken, as to make a Restraint of Liberty (in it self very grievous) tolerable to poor Men, who have had, or shall have the Missortune to become indebted more than they can pay; and as an Expedient for that End, your Committee propose, that there be a better and more commodious Goal built in Annapolis, with so much Ground, sufficiently inclosed about it, as may suffice for the Prisoners to wash and exercise in, that there be a Well or Pump, and a proper Receptacle for their Ordure: And whether the like Provision ought not to be made in every County in the Province, your Committee submit to the Consideration of the House.

The Ground which the Goal of Annapolis stands on, is Part of one of the Lotts belonging to the Church.
