The Address of the General Assembly

Sir, The Prudence, Assiduity, Diligence and Integrity, with which you have discharged, in Times the most critical, the Duties of your late important Station, have a just Claim to our warm Acknowledgments and sincerest Thanks.

While Dissipation and Avarice have too generally prevailed, your Conduct, Sir, has afforded a conspicuous Example of unwearied Attention and close Application to the public Welfare, and of Disinterestedness, in foregoing those Profits, your known Industry, Knowledge of Business and of your Profession, could not have failed of securing

We approve and admire that Consistency of Conduct, and Uniformity of Character, which distinguish a life, devoted, from a very early Period, to the true Interests of your Country, steadily and invariably pursued through a Variety of important Trusts; and relying on this your ruling Passion, the Love of your Country, we have the best founded Hope, that you will not suffer to remain long inactive, in the Retirement of private Life; those Abilities which have often been so serviceable to the State, and of which it never than at the present Time stood in greater Need.
