

that upon confidence thereof they may transplant themselves thither : For otherwise they will not dare to adventure upon such a designe , for fear that when, with much hazard, toyle, and expence they shall have disposed of themselves that way, and perhaps made themselves incapable of subsisting any where else ; they may, through want of such assurances, be utterly ruined : and they had need to be very well secured of these encouragements , to help them to overcome many other difficulties and incommodities which attend a new Plantation.

6 This will much mitigate the censure which Foreign States of that profession in Religion may have of this government, in respect of the severe proceedings against the said Roman Catholicks here, for their Religion. And may remove as well divers obstacles in future Treaties, with some of those States, which perhaps have heretofore arisen between this and them, in contemplation of the said Roman Catholicks ; as all Designs which any such State may have upon them, for the disturbance of the peace of this Kingdom, while they remain under heave burthens here: And this favor shewed unto them, will certainly oblige the said Roman Catholicks in a strong bond of fidelity, to their Native Countrey.

7 To conclude, by this means, a tender conscience shall not be violenced, a suspected party will be removed, an unity in this nation the more confirmed, an increase of the dominion of this Crown acquired; and, with these, the end of all those Laws against Recusants, viz. Their decrease in this Kingdom, more speedily brought to effect, which hath been long, but with small successe, endeavoured.
