Where the Wind Bloweth.

Where the wind bloweth Nobody knoweth.

I questioned the wise— They blinked with their eyes

While not a fool knew That the wind even blew.

Then I summoned a poet, And he didn't know it.

I tried the bright stars, Especially Mars,

And he and the rest Passed it off as a jest!

'Twas the same with the sun: None could answer—not one.

To be sure, Miss Luna Said had I come sooner,

Perhaps she had not So entirely forgot.

I asked hill and mountain, And river and fountain;

Consulted old ocean— Not the first notion!

And the end of it all Was as blank as a wall.

So I laid on the grass, And saw the clouds pass,

And heard it go by, None knew where nor why.

But just by my side I suddenly spied

One tiny green spear That had happened to hear

My questions and guessing. The wind was caressing

Its little length: Gracious and glossy,

It hadn't the strength To stand up and be saucy:

It leaned down the air, So tender and knowing—

I knew that it knew Where the wind was a-going
