JOHN P. RULLEY,

The dam of a fine carriage horse, or of any first-class horse of all work, should be bred rather than bought. That is to say, there are so few suitable animals to be found in this country that it would be shorter and surer work to breed any considerable number of them, than to hunt them up in the market. If anything less than perfection be the object, there are thousands of good mares with whom the chances of success would be tolerably fair. bred animats are rarely large chongin for heavy carriage-horses, and are often deficient in the knee action essential to the most stylish gait.

My own ideas as to the best system of breeding for carriage use are derived from Frank Fornester, who was unquestionably our best authority in these matters. His theory, which seemed a reasonable one, was that, considering the large size and high action that it is desirable to have, and considering also the importance of infusing as much thorough blood as possible, without detracting too far from these qualities, the start should be made with the largest and most stylish mares that it is possible to get. In his opinion the French Percheron, or Norman, would best supply these conditions. The Percheron mare is very large, has a good shoulder, and has a particularly fine action. At the time of his death he contemplated importing six of these mares intending to cross them twice with thorough-bred horses. All of the first cross, except the mares selected for breeding, would have found a ready market at profitable rates. They would even have made fair, heavy carriage-horses and would have been capital for omnibus teams, etc. The second cross, (three-quarters-bred,) he believed would be tiner and more valuable than any other carriage-horses that it would be possible to obtain. But he would have selected the finest of these mares to cross again with the thorough-bred, hoping in their progeny to obtain the perfection of carriage-horses and weight-carrying sadde-horses.

their progeny to obtain the perfection of carriage-horses and weight-carrying saddle-horses.

These suggestions may be valuable to farmers who propose to make horse-breeding the principal item of their business, but their operations are of much less consequence, so far as the good of the country is concerned, than is the incidental breeding of small farmers who raise one or two colts every year. It is to such that my remarks are chiefly addressed, and it would not be within their power to provide themselves with Percheron mares for the sole purpose of breeding. Their wisest course is, to provide themselves for their farm work, with the best mares that their circumstances will allow them to get, securing at least blood-like look, fine action, and a good constitution. That is, securing precisely the sort of mares, that are best adapted for work in their own teams.

I cannot convey a better idea of the kind of mare it is recommended to use than by condensing a description given in "Herbert's Hints to Horse-keepers." In frame the mare should be so formed as to be capable of carrying and well nourishing her offspring; that is, she should be what is called "roomy." The form of hip that is considered the most elegant, where the tail is set on very high and the haunch bone is nearly as high as the hip, is particularly unfit for breeding purposes. The sloping and the birth of the foal. The back, too, should be of little more than the average length, giving plenty of bed for the foal and strength for the support of its weight.—She must have four good legs under her and those legs standing, as a foundation, on four good, well-shaped, large feet, open at the heels, and concave underneath. "She should have a good, lean, bony head, small-cared, broad-fronted, well set on, upon a high, well-carried neck, thin at its junction with the head; high withers, thin, and, above all, long, sloping shoulders. A straight shoulder is an abomination; it renders speed impossible, and gives a rigid flexible motion, often producing the hocks defects may be passed very defects and defected part. Spavings, ring-bones, and all bony enlargements are constitutional and may be perpetuated. Bad feet should be especially avoided, unless they have obviously arisen from bad shoeing. Broken winded mares are out of the question, as they seldom breed. "Blindness may or may not be hereditary. " * " Simple cataract without inflammation undoubtedl runs in families, and when a horse or mare has both eyes suffering from this disease without any other derangement of the eyes. I should eschew them carefully. " " Nor should we breed from a mare which has any affection of the eyes, unless it be the direct result of an accident, such as a blow or puncture."

Any farmer who has the natural eye of a breeder and a fondness for good horses will recognize a mare coming up to this standard if he is fortunate enough to find one, and he will be wise not to breed from an animal which has much falling off from an animal which has much falling of from the falling of f

these points .- American Agriculturist. Horses' Bits in Cold Weathen.—The Rural World says: "One of the cruelest things done to dumb beasts is putting hard frozen iron bits into a horse's mouth. It is not only a painful, but a dangerous act. For every time living flesh touches a metal much below the freezing point, the latter extracts the heat from the former and freezes it. Thus a horse's mouth becomes frozen by the cold iron several times a day extracts the heat from the former and freezes it. Thus a horse's mouth becomes frozen by the cold from several times a day put into it; each time causing these freezings to go deeper, to end at last in extensive ulceration. With such a sore mouth the poor horse refuses to cat and pines away, which calls the horse doctor in.—They call it bots, glanders, horse-ail, etc., and go to eramming down poisonous drugs, in doses; and the next you know of the poor abused creature he is trotted off to be food for fish or crows. Many a valuable horse has been mysteriously lost in just that way. Thinking and humane people avoid this by warming the bits; but this is much trouble and sometimes impossible, as in night-work like staging and physicians' work. Now all this trouble is entirely avoided, as we have found on large trial, by getting the harness makers to get leather bits for winter use, so made that no metal substance can touch the flesh."

Making Tea.—Water for making tea should be used the moment it boils. The reason is that, if it is boiled for some time, all the gas that is in it escapes with the steam, and it will then not make tea of the best flavor. Clear, pure, soft water is the best.
