The Republican Party. For the hundredth time, the Republican party has been broken up. The New-Hampshire election, on Tuesday last, doubt-less finished it. For lifteen years New-Hampshire has gone against what is famil-iary termed the Democratic party. On Tuesday last that party carried the State, contrary to the calculations and expectations of their opponents, and perhaps to their own agreeable disappointment. The will run three steamers to New York this leading oracles and soothsayers of the Republican party ascribe the result to apathy in the party, to personal squabbles, to whiskey disturbances, to the Sumner with a purse of $300, and his wife with a silver fruit basket from her Sunday-school to whiskey disturbances, to the Sumner a very opportune moment. New Hampshire

"onpleasantness"—the latter happened at has always been a close State, and the above causes had all doubtless their weight, but none of them, or all of them combined, changed either the views or the votes of the Republicans, sufficient to cause such a result. In States where parties are close, the outs are ever on the aggressive; they have nothing to lose and nothing to assail, but what has been before demolished; hence, in the very nature of the case, the majority must change sides sometimes. Pet men and measures, with certain classes of the party, are set aside by the party in its course, personal affronts are taken, and personal opinions do not get the credit from the great majority which their sanguine parents think their views entitled to, and many indulge their spleen by voting for the enemy to punish their friends. Again, all who have watched politics with a view to become better acquainted with its mysterious turning and shifting, must have become convinced that ten to twenty per cent. of the voting population have an irrepressible desire to change their party every five to ten years.

Democratic successes among the Northern States have a wonderful influence in exciting the organ of hope in that party, and straight way their prophets and high priests announce that the death blow has been struck to the Republican party, the entering wedge has been driven, the "split" is irreparable, the "break-up" is at hand, &c., &c. All this is doubtless very encouraging to the party without godliness or principle sufficient to save even Sodom, but such hopes as it now indulges have been but the precursors to it, of hundreds of bitter disappointments, as this one will be. These forays of the enemy are not felt at the great heart of the Republican party. That party is the embodiment of the great principles of universal liberty. It is the guardian of that spirit which makes the United States, the light and hope of all nations whose inmost heart pants unceasingly for more and more freedom—an untrammeled will, untrammeled thought and untrammeled will, untrammeled thought and untrammeled speech. Its history is too grand, its principles too noble, and its mission too important for it ever to be broken up, while the Democrat party takes the principles to the beauty with the democratic party takes the principles are to be proposed to the town of Dover.

The Secretary of the Treasury has appointed Nath. H. Brown a Deputy Collection of the town of Dovers.

of what slavery claims to have lost; and seeking revenge which that bloody goddess craves with such famishing hunger. If every State in the Union were to give temporary majorities for the Democrat party, it could not affect the principles or the organization of the Republican party, any more than Rebel victories advanced the slaveholders' cause or weakened the purpose of the army of freedom. The Republican party owes no obligations to any man it pleases, or throw over any man who sets his individual will in opposition to a set of men.
