BALTIMORE. FARM AND HOUSEHOLD. Rearing of Turkeys, Ducks and Geese. MANSION HOUSE HOTEL,

Much quackery has been recommended in the treatment of young turkeys. Nothing, however, should be given to them, nothing done for them; they should remain in the nest, under the shelter of their mother's wings, for at least eight or ten hours; if hatched in the afternoon, till the following morning. The hen should then be placed on the grass, in the sun under a roomy coop. If the weather is fine, sho may be stationed at any point desired, by a long piece of tlannel list tied round one leg, and fastened to a stump or stone.

At first a few crumbs of bread should be offered; for some hours, the little ones will be in no hurry to eat; but, when they commence, they should be supplied constantly and abundantly with chopped egg, shreds of meat and fat, curd, boiled rice mixed cress, lettuce, and the green of onions; melted mutton-sue poured over barley-meal, and cut up when cold, as also bullock's liver boiled and minced, are excellent things. Young turkeys do not like to have their food minced much smaller than they can swallow it, preferring to make a meal at three or four mouthfuls.

bullock's liver boiled and minced, are excellent things. Young turkeys do not like to have their food minced much smaller than they can swallow it, preferring to make a meal at three or four mouthfuls, rather than to trouble themselves with the incessant pecking and scratching in which chickens so much delight. Pepper will be found particularly useful in feeding them; as, indeed, all stimulating vegetables, such as horse-radish and the like. Young turkeys are sometimes attacked by fasciola, or worms in the trachea; but not so often as chickens. Cramp is the most fatal to them, particularly in bad weather. A few pieces of board laid under and about the coop are useful; sometimes rubbing the leg with spirit will bring back the circulation. The time when the hen may be allowed full liberty with her brood depends most upon the season, the situation, etc. Some think that if the young are thriving, the sooner the old ones are out with them the better, after the first ten days or so. A safer rule may be fixed at the season called "shooting the red," when young turkeys approach the size of a partridge, or before the granular, leshy excrescences on the head and neck begin to appear; soon after, the whole plumage, particularly the tail-feathers, shoot into rapid growth, and liberal nourishment is imperatively required. If let loose at this time, they will obtain much foraging, and still be thankful for all that is given to them. Car-away-seeds, as a tonic, are beneficial, if added to plenty of barley, boiled potatoes, chopped vegetables and refuse meat. At this time the turkeys, naturally enough, begin to be troublesome and voracious; they have to grow from the size of a lark to twelve or fourteen pounds, in eight or nine months. One great merit in old birds is, that situations where nuts, acorns, and mast are to be had, they will lead off their brood to these, and all of them will abstain comparatively, from ravaging other crops.

Reamno or Ducklings.—The best mode of rearing the young of ducks depends aging other crops.

REARING OF DUCKLINGS.—The best mod REALING OF DUCKLINGS.—The best mode of rearing the young of ducks depends very much upon the situation in which they are hatched. It is customary to dip their feet in water as soon as hatched, and then to clip the down on their tails close with a pair of seissors, to prevent their becoming drabbled and water-loggod; and before their introduction to the pond, which should not be until a day or two after hatching, it is thought advisable by many to let them have a private swim or two in a small pan of water, that they may try their strength and practice their webbed feet before venturing upon a larger scale. upon a larger scale.

For the first month, the confinement of

For the first month, the confinement of the mother under a coop is better than too much liberty. Their first food may be boiled eggs, nettles, and a little barley; all kinds of sapped food, cornneal and water mixed thin, worms, etc., suit them; they will also greedily eat cabbages or other greens, mixed with boiled bran; and this mess, with the addition of pepper, forms a valuable dietetic. In a few days, they require no care, being perfectly able to shift for themselves; but at any age they are the most helpless of the inhabitants of the poultry-yard, having no weapons with which to defend themselves from vermin, or animals of prey, and their awkward, which to defend themselves from vermin, or animals of prey, and their awkward, waddling gait precluding their seeking safety in flight. The old duck is not so brave in defense of her brood as the hen; but she will, nevertheless, display 2t times much spirit. The young seldom die of any disease, and with proper precaution there will be no trouble in raising almost as many ducklings as are hatched. They come early to maturity, being nearly full-grown and in fine eating order at three months old; far excelling, in this respect, all other poultry, except geese.

out with their mother to forage for themselves. They are cheerful, harmless, good natured, cleanly creatures, carefully washing themselves, and arranging their dress, before commencing their meals; and the healthy heartiness of their appetite is

REARING OF GOSLINGS.—For the first

amusing, rather than disgusting.

Reading of Goslasgs.—For the first three or four days, goslings must be kept warm and dry, and fed on barley meal, or oat-meal, mixed with milk, if easily procurable; if not, with water. They will begin to grow in about a week. For a week or two, they should not be turned out until late in the morning; and should always be taken in early in the evening.—Their great enemy is the cramp, which can be kept off by making them sleep on drystraw. A little boiled rice, daily, assists their growth; with corn, of course, as soon as they can eat it. When goslings are first allowed to go at large with their mother, every plant of hemlock which grows within their range should be pulled up, as they are very apt to eat it, and it generally proves fatal. Nightshade is equally pernicious to them; and they have been known to be poisoned by eating sprigs of yew-tree.—American Stock Journal.

The Celery Crop.

Thankful for the large patronages of generously bestowed upon us during the past Summer and Fall, we are still ready to wait on the Public, and supply all their wants for the remaining Winter, at LESS THAN REGULAR PRICES, to make room for Spring Stock.

JOHN P. RULEY,

DRICK MEETING HOUSE, MD.

Jan 7, 1871—16

We hold to the same opinion now that we have for twenty-five years, that as a rule transplanting of celery is deferred to too late a period. In nine cases out of ten there is not enough allowed to fully develop the crop. Will not the experience of nearly every one affirm this? Another mistake is shown in setting the plants too near the surface of the ground, rendering the banking-up difficult and deficient. We greatly prefer the the old way in vogue since the first cultivation of celery in this country; that is to dig trenches full ten inches deep; stir up the subsoil thoroughly; mix with it plenty of short, well-rotted yard-manure; set the plants; water twice a day; cover with boards to protect from the sun six or seven hours a day; say from 9 to 4 o'clock, until the plants are well-established; then apply manure-water daily, in the absence of rain, until filling in and banking up of the earth begins.

of rain, until filling in and banking up of the earth begins.

The plants for early use—for the latter part of November and through Decembor—should be set the last week in June; and all the rest by the middle of July.

Many persons cultivate celery in double triple rows. This does well enough where ground is scarce; but where there is plenty of room single rows are decidly to be preferred, even though the plants are set closer together than usual. We have had celery by the single row system three feet and a half in length.—Germantown Telegraph.

How to Raise Horsenadish.-Thous ands of people would have this spicy vege-table if they only knew how easy it was to have it tender and nice, instead of digging it out of the grass after it has become to have it tender and mee, including the property of the carried and tough.

Two square rods will supply a large family with all they can eat and some to give to kind neighbors besides.

Select a good deep soil, manure well, and then throw your ground into ridges, about three and one-half feet apart with plow or spade, rake evenly, leaving the ridge a little list on the top, then take your hoe handle and make holes about three inches deep, and from iffeen to eighteen inches apart on the centre of the ridge; now drop into these holes a piece of radish two inches long, cut from the long slim roots too small to scrape; those from a quarter to a halfinch in diameter will do. Cultivate the same as for any of the common garden vegetables, taking care to keep the earth drawn up a little. In the fall, just before hard freezing comes on dig and store the roots where they can be got at easily for use at any time; they can be put in the cellar or kept with the potatoes.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla FOR PURIFYING THE BLOOD.

The reputation this excellent medicine enjoys, is derived from his cures, in any of which are truly marvellous. Inveterate cases of scrofulous discases, where the system seemel saturated with corruption, have been purified and cured by it. Scrofulous affections and disorders, which were agravated by the scrofulous force of its virtues or uses.

Scrofulous poison is one of the most destructive enemics of our race. Often, this unseen and unfeit tenant of the organism undermines the constitution, and invites the attack of enfectling or fatal discases, without exciting a suspicion of its presence. Again, it seems to breed infection throughout the body, and then, on some favorable occasion, rapidly develop into one or other of its hideous forms, either on the surface or among the vitals. In the latter, tubercles may be subdenly deposited in the lungs or heart, or tumors formed in the liver, or it shows its presence by cruptions on the skin, or foul ulcerations on some part of the body. Hence the occasional use of a bottle of this Sursuparilla is advisable, oven when no active symptoms of disease appear. Persons afflicted with the following complaints generally find immediate relief, and, at length, cure, by the use of this Sursuparilla is advisable, oven when no active symptoms of disease appear.
