Collapse of the Democratic Party. The election news from Pennsylvania, all parties were astonished. The Republican party confidently expected victory, but not such an annihilating defeat to the partisans of the "Lost Cause." The Democratic persistent, in sticking to that "Lost Cause," and now, it would seem, they have, like shipwrecked mariners in mid-ocean, it 'mid the earthquake's shock and the

Who got the money after it went into that committee's hands, none but themselves ever knew; but the people are paying taxes for the interest on that money, every year .-Had the Republican party remained in power, in the State, to this time, every property holder would have paid at least nine cents tax on the $100 less to-day, than he is now compelled to pay yearly, to keep down the interest on the State debt. The increasing resources of the State were such as would have sufficed to pay the interest on the debt and provide a sinking fund, without resorting to direct taxation for this purpose. That this outrageous state of affairs is justly attributable to the honest, upright men who compose the main strength of the Democratic party, no fair minded man will charge; but can they control the rings and professional politicians of that party, who hold entire control of all the offices, while they continue to vote for the men they place in nomination? Many honcst men are nominated by the party, for the different offices in State and county, who doubtless desire to do what is right; but such men, when elected, are borne down by majorities of mercenary wretches, against whose double dealing and county and county whose double dealing and county, who whose double dealing and experience in "ways that are dark, and tricks that are vain," plain, home-spun honesty stands no chance. There is but one way to remedy corruption in party officials, when that corruption is found to control the legislative power, and that is an entire change of party. If the Republican party should be placed in power by the people, and it is found that political adventurers work their way to the front—for those fellows invariations for the nearly in power, it mate bly declare for the party in power, it mat-ters not what that party may be—then, in Philadelphia. order to oust the thieves, and purify the body politic, let the administration of pubbody politic, let the administration of public affairs be placed in the hands of the opposing party. There is no safety for republican institutions, but in the knowledge and independence of the people, which make the voter superior to party ties, that are inventions of politicians to hold in subjugation their peers. The only hope for purifying the party at present in power in this State, is voting it out of office. The professional politicians who control the Democratic organization, will be cast out, Democratic organization, will be cast out, and their horse-leech hold on the jugular vein of the State will be broken, and their

These men were maimed and crippled, in the several districts of this county, have beyond all power to work, while in the one more chance to place their names on army of the United States, fighting to put the registration list. The following eloquent passage occurs in the speech of Postmaster General Creswell, at the laying of the corner-stone of the Boston Post Office on Monday last: The Address, published on our first page, this week, "To the Voters and Tax-Payers of Cecil County," prepared by a committee appointed for the purpose, will arrest every thoughtful man, by the array of facts and figures it presents, in contrasting the management of the two political parties, of the affairs of this county and State. These figures are taken from the Reports of the county finances, commonly called the Levy Lists, and the Comp-State. The flames ran faster than the fleetest animals, and soon reached the Big Woods, extending for more than one hundred miles from north to south.—There the fire seized upon the underbrush, which was dry as tluder, and presently the forest was burning in all directions, and a clean sweep of the heavy timber was made for many miles. This fire extended through several large counters, reaching from near the Red river of the north to the Minnesota river, near Mankato, a distance of about one hundred and fifty miles. Through the vast lamber region on both sides of Green Bay, Wisconsin, the fires have raged for upwards of a hundred miles in extent. In Michigan the destruction has been of the most fearful character.—But it is impossible to give even an outline of the vast destruction which has been parched to a tinder by a long drought, and the fires once lighted were arrived by the winds in all directions.
