FARM AND HOUSEHOLD. Bones .- A Great Waste.

Bones are a very important agricultural product, for they remove from the soil a very large amount of its most valuable mineral constituent. Consisting largely of phosphate of lime, the abstract from the farm that which we find it most difficult and most expensive to replace. The extent of this abstraction, too, is something considerable. The number of animals brought into the city of New York during 1870 was as follows: 336,044 oxen, 880,016 swine, 1,463,852 sheep, and 116,480 calves. Estimating the average weights of these as 700 lbs. for seepe, and 100 lb. for calves, dressed weights, and the bones at 20 per cent of the weights of the carcass, there would be over 50,000 tons of bones. The consumption of New York is probably one twentieth of that of the whole United States. There would be therefore one million tons of bones produced on our farms and pastures in a very law peans of animals residues.

of bones produced on our farms and pas-tures in a year by means of animals raised for food alone. Fifty-five per cent of this consists of phosphate of lime, or 550,000 tons. Now it is a question worthy of con-sideration how much of this is returned to sideration how much of this is returned to the soil in the shape of bone-dust or super-phosphates, or whether it is possible ever to recover the great portion of it. Vast quantities of bones are used in the arts, for the purpose of manufacturing handles of brushes and knives, rings umbrella and parasol handles, buttons, and an infinite variety of other "notions," the material of which is lost to agriculture. Then there are exported to foreign countries over 72,-000 tons per annum, in the shape of bone-black or raw-bone, which is also lost to us. Then the large quantity uncollected and black or raw-bone, which is also lost to us. Then the large quantity uncollected and left to waste all over the country would probably bring the total lost to agriculture to a half of the quantity produed. Therefore it is pretty certain that not more than one half of the amount of phosphates abstracted from the soil is retured thereto in the shape of bone-dust, super-phosphates, and other artificial manures. We do not take into account the loss by means of the STOVES which our lands have been subjected for a period now measured by centuries in some districts, but by scores of years in almost all the eastern parts of the country.

But when we understand the cause of a thing, the remedy becomes apparent. And a remedy must be applied forthwith. We are abundantly warned in the lessening fertility of our fields that we must restore something of what we have for so many years been occupied in abstracting, and that, if possible no particle of bone be suffered to escape the service for which it is so much required. That a large quantity is irrecoverably wasted each year is a fact beyond dispute, all of which would be gladly utilized if it could be secured. Hundreds of tons are annually wasted by farmers themselves, who, if they do not care to use them on their own farms, should feel it to be their duty to put others who would use them on their own farms, should feel it to be their duty to put others who would gladly use them in the way of procuring them. In most towns and villages of the United States, there are dealers who would gladly purchase them, at a price equal to or approximating a cent a pound; and if those who make a business of ornshing hones, for the purposs of manufacturing bones, for the purposs of manufacturing them into manure, could procure them, there would be made a large addition to the available amount of fertilizers in the market, all of which would ultimately find its way look to the state.

Braid of which would ultimately find its way back to the soil whence it was originally abstrated. Great Britain imports a large quantity of bones for agricultural use, and exports none, gathering from almost every country in the world; and the consequence is that crops there have reached and maintainedat an average quantity equal to the maximum ever reached in the most abundantby periods of American agriculture. Here is a lesson for us that we should not hesitate to learn, and we should not hesitate to learn, and we shall guide ourselves accordingly.
