Pay Your Debts .- There is a wide spread evil in the chronic disposition to shirk paying debts, and small debts especially. Aside from the great drawback on, and stumbling-block to business, it is downright dishonesty. Capital at all times represents interest, as truly as labor represents wages; and the man who retains another's capital in the form of debts without interest, is perpetrating the same wrong that he is who withholds the laborer's wages. Both are consuming the substance of others, and committing as great a moral wrong as he who abstracts by stealth, and appropriates to his own use the goods of his fellow man. The law designates the latter a thief and punishes him with imprisonment, while it deals differently by the former in compelling him to make restitution, by seizing on and selling at public vendue his goods. The lat ter penalty which seizes a debtor's goods is considered less severe and less ignominous than the former, which takes the body of the offender and deprives him of his liberty for a season. Formerly a debtor was meted out the same punishment as the thief, and confined in jail till he paid his indebtedness, or at the option of his creditor .-This law has great antiquity in its favor for we read in the ancient Book, "Agree with thine adversary quickly, whiles thou art in the way with him; lest at any time the adversary deliver thee to the Judge, and the Judge deliver thee to the officer, and thou be cast into prison. Verily I say unto thee thou shalt by no means come out thence, till thou hast paid the uttermost

In those simple days justice stood in the way with a naked sword, and compelled obelience to her laws. The doctrine that "the world owes me a living" had not then been juvented. The world owes no man anything; but man is in debt to the world for all be hax, and he owes the world an honest and persistent effort to obtain that living. The thief of speculation had not then corrupted the morals of men by markins sympathy for the "unfortunate" evil doer, but society visited its just resemble that the previous party. This infernal sentiment on his head, while reserving life sympathy for the robbed and injured party. This infernal sentiment of sympathy for the robbed and injured party. This infernal sentiment of sympathy for the robbed and injured party. This infernal sentiment of sympathy for the robbed and injured party. This infernal sentiment of sympathy for the robbed and injured party. This infernal sentiment of sympathy for the world with pertyre gave, some holes the entire social fabric of the present day. A plausible scoundred has only to be unlucky enough to be caught and imprisoned, to draw the sympathizing eyes of the whole community upon him, while the long avenue of crime which he has passed through to reach the unpleasant situation, is entirely in the present day.

This injustice to itself has filled the world with petty regues, as well as added to the list of greater criminals, till you may count by hundreds people who seem to study nothing else but how to get in debt, without the remotest idea of ever paying. This thing is practiced among the bot on, the country of the inspection of plants and the proposance of the advantages thus reserved the branch of the advantages the corrain sale of, such the electron of the advantages that the correct the unpleasant situation, is entirely to find the advantage that seeming of all possible to be caught and imprisoned, to draw the sympathizing eyes of the whole community upon him, while the long areane of crime while he has passed through to reach the unpleasant s In those simple days justice stood in the without the remotest idea of ever paying. This thing is practiced among the bon ton, among all classes, in the church, among all classes of society, and is the leading sin of the day. To this habit may be traced almost as many crimes as to intemperance. And yet on these and similar immoralities, we never hear a sermon preached. The ministers fight the devil afar off, and never perceive he is busy at work under their very nose, in the midst of their congregations, from which centres of their congregations, from which centres is expected to radiate the moral light and warmth that is to lighten and fructify the

There never was an offence committed without the palliative, and the excuse for this professional debt making, is "unfortunate," "become involved," &c., &c. In be claimed, there are at least one hundred in which they are utterly without foundation. If a man's conscience prompts ly makes arrangements to economize in his ness. Men of this class seldom find any defeat,-and then what? difficulty in keeping out of debt; while there are others who never can keep out because they don't want to. The sin of extravagance and a disposition to shirk honest labor is the crying evil of the day. To swindle your neighbor out of his honest carnings is the modern improvement. there are others who never can keep out est earnings is the modern improvement in gambling. He is found in the pulpit, on the judge's bench, in the halls of legislation, in the busy marts of trades, talking and laughing the loudest, giving tone to society; but if you examine him closely you will find him a true offspring of the old highwayman of the middle ages. What he has lost in courage he has gained in diplomacy; what's lacking in brawn and muscle, he is more than conapensated for in smooth speech and fair promise. He is the man who steals by speculation, cheats by lying, gets in debt by fair promises, and tells you he "can't" pay, because he don't try, and aever intended to from the beginning.
